

AN ESSAY ON CHILD ABUSE: COMMENDING UNICEF

INTRODUCTION

He felt the pain before realizing her presence. It was already too late to apologize. Another stroke of the cane and he made for the door. As usual, it was locked, the keys securely located in her pockets. In this heavily guarded house, he was not safe.

"You want to run away huh!" She growled, "I will teach you to greet your elders when you see them."

He used to stand still and cry in hope that his aunt would stop flogging him. But Aunt Stella would not stop punishing Chris until two hours were completed. So he had learnt to help her exercise her fat body by running around the house.

As he ran around crying, his ten-year-old body ached on all sides. The wounds inflicted from yesterday's punishment were reopened, and the sores were made fresher. Every day seems like yesterday- like hell. When will it all end?

And this is the cry of a hundred, no a thousand, I am sorry, a million children who undergo horrendous degrees of abuse. Now, shall we begin?

The period which formed the background and served as the antecedents necessitating the enactment of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (1948) was the period of the Second World War (1939-1945), during which massive and systematic human rights abuses were committed.

One can imagine the pains, grief, homelessness, hopelessness, despair, thirst, hunger, depravity, and the list goes on, of deceased widows, widowers and especially orphans who cried in vain to see their mama, papa, sisters and brothers but could not... who waited eagerly, the soldiers who rescued them reassuring them, to see their families and loved ones again but in vain. The pretty female youngsters had frequent visitations of rape, from both soldiers who were supposed to protect their right to life and dignity, and from those soldiers determined to snatch it from them; in the place where they thought they were assuredly safe, never to have the safety of their families and homes again. Certainly, some of those children would have wondered if there was no human among the adults before them, one who knew they had some rights and had sense enough to defend them; human enough to defend the rights of the children turned victims of men with darkened sense of humanity and conscience. They would have had the same question on Chris' mind about all the inhumane and cruel happenings around
