

Weekly Blogs (15%)

You will need to write 20 sentences each week to share with me what you have learned during the week. Deadlines will be very important in your future career. You may also be required to give reports of your projects. Your required weekly blogs are a good way for you begin documenting what you do during the week. These blogs will be seen by your classmates, so do your best. These blogs will be very helpful for you and others in preparing for your midterm test, final test, and final projects. The deadline is every Friday at 5pm. However, you do not have to wait until after Friday's class to write your blog. You will probably have enough to write about after the first class, and your homework to write a blog. You can also write about your progress of your long-term projects, or how our class material relates to other things you are learning in other classes or observing in the world news. Some students in the past have had valid reasons for why they may need an extension on these weekly deadlines. Come talk to me and we can come up with a weekly plan that is sensitive to your unique schedule.

Attentive Points (formerly known as "Attendance Points" (15%)

As stated above, you are not guaranteed attendance points by just showing up. I give Attentive Points, not attendance points.

Participation A.K.A. Extra Credit (5%)

These are basically extra credit points for the students who spend the whole semester finding ways to lead and participate. The best way to earn points is by participating in class and online in our class website. Our class website has a unique way of measuring who is participating the most. Again, these are only for the leaders in the class. It is a competition to earn these points.

This is basically extra credit for those students who go the extra mile in participating and helping their classmates understand the material. Participation points in my class are my way of rewarding students who give extra effort to participate in class and/or online in a way that shows that they are willing to actively share what they are learning in class.

These points are not easy to earn. In 15 weeks, you will have many opportunities to be a leader by sharing your opinions and new information you are learning from this course.

Personal Projects (35%)

I believe in giving students control to earn their grades. I also know that spending four or more years in college is a waste of time if you can not show what you have learned. That is why 35% of your final grade will be determined by personal projects. You will receive details in week three, but you can plan on a final paper (10%), final presentation(10%), Scoop.it activity (10%), Google+ activity (4%), and to be the key components of your 35%. You will also have a written proposal that is worth 1%. Other programs such as Google Docs and NetVibes will require activity that will go toward your attendance and possibly participation points.

Midterm Test (10%)

My tests are not easy, but they are fair. My tests are mostly short answer and essays. They take one hour. Most students use all 60 minutes. I advise talking to previous students of mine about how to prepare for my tests. They are not easy, but they are worth less points than some of your other classes. This class is an 'action' class. You can make up for a poor test by working on your semester-long projects.
