Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of older adults. The study was a randomized controlled trial. The intervention group consisted of 20 older adults who participated in a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program. The control group consisted of 20 older adults who did not participate in the program. The primary outcome was the change in the 6-minute walk test (6MWT) score. The secondary outcomes were the change in the Mini-Mental State Examination (MMSE) score, the change in the Geriatric Depression Scale (GDS) score, and the change in the Physical Functioning subscale of the Short-Form 36 (SF-36) score. The 6MWT score increased significantly in the intervention group compared with the control group. The MMSE score, GDS score, and SF-36 score also increased significantly in the intervention group compared with the control group. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of older adults.
