

CHANGING THE RATE OF REACTION LAB INVESTIGATION REPORT

Kate Yoo 10R

Aim:

My aim for this task is to design an experiment that investigates the effect of concentration on rate of reaction of carbonate in acid. Through the experiment, I will be investigating how the reaction rate of vitamin tablet changes depending on different amount of acid.

Research Question:

How does concentration of the acid affect the rate of reaction?

Independent variable(change):

Concentration (Amount of acid)

I will be controlling the concentration of acid by adding water into the solution.

Dependent variable(measure):

The highest peak of the gas pressure rate of certain amount of HCl

The average of gas pressure of different concentration

Controlled variables:

Variables	How?	Why?
The amount or size of single vitamin tablet that one puts into a flask (Surface area)	I will adjust the amount of vitamin tablet powder as 2grams. Before beginning the experiment, I've learnt that 1 single tablet produces quite excessive amount of gas so that it would be hard to collect the data, and the experiment won't be conducted well, too. Therefore, I've decided to grind the tablets and adjust those as 2 grams per 1 trial so that we can conduct the better experiment with the appropriate amount of gas produced; not so much, not so less. It will help collecting the data more efficiently.	To conduct the fair experiment, equalizing the amount of vitamin tablet will be necessary. Since this experiment is to investigate the changes on rate of reaction depending on different concentrations, every conditions must be controlled as the same only except for the amount of acid. If the amount of vitamin tablet powder is varied for every different trials, the experiment result will not be accurate. In addition, since surface area is also another variable that changes the reaction rate, it is needed to equalize the amount of vitamin powder to prevent other factor(different surface area) from contributing to the result of the experiment.
