FACT FILE 2: A GUIDE TO BATTING

● The key to success as a batsman at any level is being able to judge which is the right shot to play to a delivery.

● Here is a general guide to the different shots that can be played to deliveries of varying line and length.

Full length

Pitches relatively close to the batsman, so that the ball is just rising as it reaches him.

Off drive

Shot played through the off side along the ground.

Leave

Batsman deliberately plays no shot and allows the ball to pass.

Backward defensive

Back-foot shot played without a back-swing designed to kill the momentum and movement of the ball.

Forcing shot

A batsman tries to manufacture a scoring stroke to a ball that he would normally defend or leave.

Square cut

Horizontal bat shot to the point area or backward of point (at 9 o'clock from the batsman).

Bouncer/long hop

Short-pitched ball that rises to the height of the batsman's chest or above as it reaches him.

Hook

Similar shot to the pull but played to deliveries that bounce higher/more.

Bouncer

A ball that does not bounce on the ground and reaches the batsman at or about head height.

Full toss

A ball that does not bounce on the ground before reaching the batsman.

Yorker

A ball that bounces on or around the batting crease.

On drive

Shot played into the on (leg) side along the ground.

Straight drive

Shot played back down the wicket past the bowler along the ground.

Forward defensive

Front-foot shot played without a back-swing designed to kill the momentum and movement of the ball.

Good length

When the ball hits the ground just far enough away from the batsman to make it difficult to play a comfortable shot on the front or back foot.

Sweep

Kneeling shot, played with a horizontal bat swing across the body, hitting the ball into the leg side.

Short of a length

Bounces relatively close to the bowler so that the ball reaches the batsman on the rise above knee height.

Pull

Shot played to a short-length ball where the batsman stands upright and plays a horizontal bat shot to the leg side.
