There are two kinds of people in the world—the kind who think there are two kinds of people in the world and the kind who do not. This book elaborates on the core thesis that there are two kinds of depressed people, those with "anaclitic" depression and those with "introjective" depression. Sidney Blatt has made many fundamental contributions to defining this distinction clinically, as well as testing it through a great deal of research. Further, his classification of depression has inspired many other investigators to expand on his own studies. All these investigations have amply validated the usefulness of Blatt's distinction. In his Foreword, Peter Fonagy calls Blatt "a clinical psychologist with a record of discovery and mentorship that few anywhere in the world can rival and, beyond this, a psychoanalyst with a powerful clinical and epistemological commitment to the field" (p. ix).

Blatt observes that the subjective experience of people suffering from dependent or anaclitic depression is of being unloved and neglected. Such people want to be comforted and taken care of. Yet they feel helpless about being loved and cared for. Their early relationships led them to feel deprived and abandoned. Their object representations are organized on a primitive level, where the other person exists primarily as a need-gratifying object whose physical presence must be constant, rather than as a separate, autonomous individual whose mental presence can be evoked even in the object's physical absence. Their insufficient capacity to retain a stable, comforting mental representation of the object makes them more vulnerable to loss, to which they are likely to respond with efforts to find an immediate need-gratifying replacement. Their early attachment style was probably of the anxious-ambivalent insecure type. They are not prone to feelings of guilt. Clinicians may overlook the primary sources of dysphoria for these patients. They may be distracted by the patients' somatic complaints, substance abuse, or antisocial behavior. Patients with anaclitic depression are highly attuned to the relational dimension of treatment, responding favorably to empathy and support. Since they are not psychologically minded, they are poorly suited for psychoanalytic treatment. However, they often respond well to supportive psychotherapy,
