CESSNA POWER STEERING PUMP

General Description and Operating Principles

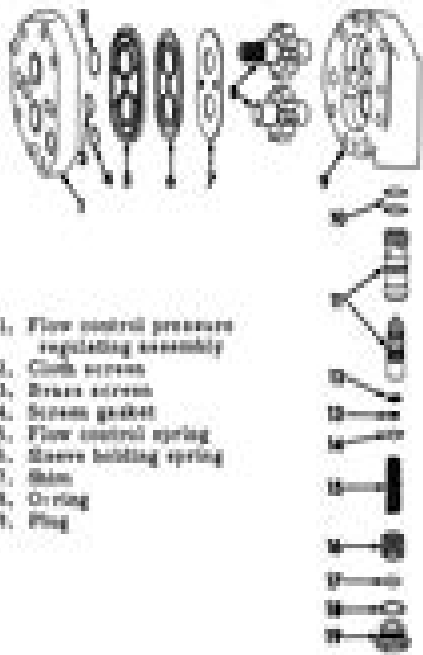

(Reference numbers refer to Sheet, 25.)

This power steering pump is attached to the main hydraulic pump (when used) located in the clutch housing. When the tractor is not equipped with a main hydraulic pump, the power steering pump is attached to and driven from a power steering pump adapter assembly. The power supply is from the drive gear shaft of the main pump when used and from the drive shaft of the adapter assembly when the main pump is not used. The source of fluid is from the same inlet valve that supplies the main pump.

The design of this pump is similar to the main pump. It has a set of matched gears, a diaphragm operated and thrust plate and a pump body. See Sheet, 25. The power steering pump differs only in that it does not have a shaft seal.

The pump body contains the flow control and pressure regulating valve of the power steering system.
