Challenges Of The Housing Economy Challenges Of The Housing Economy:

Challenges of the Housing Economy Colin Jones, Michael White, Neil Dunse, 2012-03-05 This timely book addresses key challenges faced by policy makers and the house building industry in a post credit crunch world It examines the implications for households the housing market the economy as well as for government s policy choices Challenges of the Housing Economy an international perspective brings together experts from around the world to examine recent housing market trends The contributions reveal common long term trends in housing markets worldwide Despite differences in supply conditions and the role of planning there is a trend toward rising house prices that has created significant barriers to home ownership for young households while increasing the wealth of older generations The financial crisis had a differential impact on housing markets but in many countries where mortgage finance became severely constrained house prices fell and there was a dramatic fall in housing construction The falls in house prices in these countries have ostensibly improved affordability but the housing markets have been dominated by the lowering of loan to values applicable to new mortgages which has further raised the hurdles to potential first time purchasers At the same time as young households are increasingly rationed out of owner occupation public sector expenditure cut backs in many countries result in limited new social housing Instead value for money imperatives will mean new funding models for affordable housing that require greater use of public private partnerships The private rented sector could potentially meet the demand for the new generation of long term renters However there are doubts in the UK at least that this sector will be able to expand significantly or provide an appropriate type and standard of housing This is an essential advanced text for students and researchers of land economy and land management property and real estate housing policy and urban studies perceived to be more sustainable than other housing approaches that often rely on quantitative housing delivery and top down planning methodologies While this study does not question the benefits of the in situ upgrading approach it seeks to identify problems of its practical implementation within a specific national and local context The study discusses the origin and importance of this approach on the basis of a review of international housing policy development and analyses the broader political and social context of the incorporation of this approach into South African housing policy It further uses insights from a recent case study in Cape Town to determine complications and conflicts that can arise when applying in situ upgrading of informal settlements in a complex local context On that basis benefits and limitations of the in situ upgrading approach are specified and prerequisites for its successful implementation formulated

Housing, Urban Renewal and Socio-Spatial Integration Xiaoxi Hui,2013-02-07 This issue of A BE addresses two critical urban issues China faces today housing and urban renewal In the recent two decades the Chinese urban housing stock underwent a significant if not extreme transformation From 1949 to 1998 the urban housing stock in China largely depended on the public sector and a large amount of public housing areas were developed under the socialistic public housing system in Beijing and other Chinese cities Yet in 1998 a radical housing reform stopped this housing system Thus most of the public housing stock was privatized and the urban housing provision was conferred to the market The radical housing privatization and marketization did not really resolve but intensified the housing problem Along with the high speed urbanization the alienated capitalized and speculative housing stock caused a series of social and spatial problems The Chinese government therefore attempted to reestablish the social housing system in 2007 However the unbalanced structure of the Chinese urban housing stock has not been considerably optimized and the housing problem is still one of the most critical challenges in China
