D. Wire Identification and Numbering.

(1) In each electrical and electronic wiring circuit, the wires are identified by a number-letter code called a wire number. The wire number is either printed, stenciled or labeled on each wire segment. A wire segment is a run of wire between two points in a circuit. The wire number explains where the wire is used and gives the wire gage. Refer to Figure 2 for an example of the wire identification and numbering system.

| Red | Alumel |
| Yellow | Chromel |

E. Parts List.

(1) Electrical and electronic equipment used in the wiring diagrams are identified by an alphanumeric reference designator. This reference designator is used as a cross-reference to the parts list where the part number and part description are shown. The five digit Federal Supply Code may be found in the Suppliers Address List to find the suppliers name and address.

(2) Most reference designators consists of two (2) alphabetical characters followed by three (3) numeric characters.

(a) The first alphabetical character denotes component type.
