

Jae Park, CFA, is a manager of a hedge fund that bases its security selection on advanced quantitative analysis. For several open job positions with the fund, Park is looking to hire people with scientific and research backgrounds. Using multiple regression, she would like to evaluate the relationship between the expected salary of the candidates based on their years of experience (EXP), number of published research papers (PRP), and amount of grant funding received in their career (GF). The results of that regression are shown below, along with sample critical values. Park wishes to test the results at a 5% significance level ($\alpha = 0.05$).

Park also notices that each candidate attended one of four universities. She is considering how to add a variable for university attended to the regression model and believes dummy variables are the best way to capture this.

Finally, Park suspects that her regression in its current form may violate regression assumptions. Her concern is that her model might have an artificially large R^2 and t-statistics that are understated.

Question 1 of 1

Based on the data in Exhibit 1, the regression is most likely a good predictor of projected salary since:

- ☐ A. it has a high R^2 .
- ☒ B. the F-statistic has a low p-value.
- ☐ C. most coefficients are statistically significant.

Explanation

Hypothesis testing verifies whether a regression is a good predictor of the dependent variable. Testing can be performed on coefficients or the overall regression.

The F-statistic is used to test whether the overall regression (i.e. the combination of all slope coefficients) is statistically significant. The null hypothesis (H_0) states that the model has no statistically significant coefficients, while the alternative hypothesis (H_A) states that at least one coefficient is significant.

The ANOVA table provides the F-statistic's p-value (labeled "significance F"). H_0 is rejected if the p-value is less than the level of significance (α). In this scenario, the p-value is less than α ($0 < 0.05$), so H_0 is rejected and the regression is statistically significant. In other words, the regression is a good predictor of the dependent variable.

(Choice A) R^2 gauges how closely the data fit the regression line. Adding independent variables will increase R^2 , even if those variables are only slightly correlated with the dependent variable. Furthermore, R^2 does not measure statistical significance. Models may have multiple coefficients without statistical significance and still have a high R^2 . The model's predictive power depends mainly on the statistical significance of the regression and the coefficients.

(Choice C) A t-test can determine if a slope coefficient is statistically significant. However, the model's overall fit cannot be determined from t-tests due to possible interactions among the independent variables. Individual coefficients can be statistically significant, but the overall regression is not.

Real Options Valuation Marcus Schulmerich, 2010-08-03 After the first edition of this book was published in early 2005 the world has changed dramatically and at a pace never seen before The changes that occurred in 2008 and 2009 were completely unthinkable two years before These changes took place not only in the Finance sector the origin of the crisis but also as a result in other economic sectors like the automotive sector Governments now own substantial parts if not majorities in banks or other companies which recorded losses of double digit billions of USD in 2008 2008 saw the collapse of leading stand alone U S investment banks In many countries interest rates fell close to zero What has happened While the economy showed strong growth in 2004 to 2006 the Subprime or Credit Crisis changed the picture completely What started in the U S housing market in late 2006 became a full edged global financial crisis and has affected financial markets around the world A decline in U S house prices and increasing interest rates caused a higher rate of subprime mortgage delinquencies in the U S and due to the wide distribution of securitized assets had a negative effect on other markets As a result markets realized that risks had been underestimated and volatility increased This development culminated in the bankruptcy of the investment bank Lehman Brothers in mid September 2008
