

Chapter 43: The Immune System Reading Guide

Our students consider this chapter to be a particularly challenging and important one. Expect to work your way slowly through the first three concepts. Take particular care with Concepts 43.2 and 43.3. It is rewarding, however, in concept 43.4 to put your new knowledge to work and truly understand the devastation caused by the destruction of helper T cells by HIV.

Overview

The immune responses of animals can be divided into innate immunity and adaptive immunity. As an overview, draw and complete Figure 43.2 indicating the divisions of both innate and adaptive immunity.

43.1 In innate immunity, recognition and response rely on traits common to groups of pathogens

1. We first encountered phagocytosis in concept 7.5, but it plays an important role in the immune systems of both invertebrates and vertebrates. Review the process by briefly explaining the six steps to ingestion and destruction of a microbe by a phagocytic cell.
2. Explain the role of the Toll receptor in producing antimicrobial peptides.
3. List the three innate defenses vertebrates share with invertebrates and the two defenses unique to vertebrates.
4. List five examples of barrier defenses and how they work.
5. Explain how Toll-like receptors are used in cellular innate defenses, using TLR3 and TLR4 as examples.
6. Explain the role of the following four types of phagocytic cells: (A) neutrophils, (B) macrophages, (C) dendritic cells, and (D) eosinophils.
7. Natural killer cells are not phagocytic. How do they assist in innate defenses and what types of cells do they detect?
8. In the Figure 43.7, explain the flow of lymph in four stages. For each stage, explain the lymphatic system's role in innate defense.
9. Explain the role of interferon and complement antimicrobial compounds.
10. Explain the three steps of an inflammatory response.
11. It might seem like pathogens have little hope mounting an infection, but do not forget that pathogens are constantly evolving ways to circumvent our immune system. As examples, how do the pathogens that cause pneumonia and tuberculosis avoid our immune responses?

43.2 In adaptive immunity, receptors provide pathogen-specific recognition

12. From the first four paragraphs of this concept, summarize where T cells and B cells develop, and give an overview of their functions. (Note that they are a type of white blood cell known as lymphocyte.)
13. What is immunological memory, and why is it important?
14. Explain how cytokines help coordinate the innate and adaptive immune responses.
15. The following brief questions will serve as a beginning primer for immune system recognition.
 - a. What is an antigen?
 - b. What is the relationship between an antigen receptor, an antibody, and an immunoglobulin?
 - c. How is an epitope related to an antigen? (Look at figure 43.10 in your text).
16. Draw and label 43.9. Be sure to include the antigen-binding sites, light and heavy chains, variable and constant regions, transmembrane region, and disulfide bridges.
17. What forms the specific antigen-binding site? (Be sure to recognize that each B cell produces only one type of antigen receptor. For any one cell, all antigen receptors or antibodies produced are identical.)
18. Draw and label the antigen-binding site, α and β chain, variable and constant regions, transmembrane region, and disulfide bridge of a T cell.
