

A photograph of a massive, ancient tree trunk in a forest. The tree's bark is heavily textured and covered in green moss. A person is standing at the base of the tree on the left, providing a sense of scale. The forest floor is covered in green ferns and other vegetation. The title "Champion Trees of Washington State" is overlaid in a white, serif font on the right side of the image.

American settlers arrived in Seattle in the 1850s the surrounding old growth forests were rapidly harvested for lumber causing environmental degradation and displacing native peoples Conflicts about the future of Pacific Northwest forests have continued since then Only recently have academics government agencies industry small private landowners tribes and environmental organizations come together to develop plans to protect the remaining old growth forests wildlife streams and fish as well as providing environmentally friendly forest products Practicing sustainable forestry maintaining healthy forests that are less susceptible to fire insects and diseases and fostering public enjoyment are now the main goals of forest management However conflicts still exist and with climate change a looming threat it is important to realize that forests give us much more than lumber Robert L Edmonds professor emeritus at the School of Environmental and Forest Sciences

University of Washington UW wrote this book to bring attention to the sustainability of natural resources He describes how Washington State s forests and the practice of forestry have changed through time and how these changes relate to the long history of research and teaching at the UW Its scope extends beyond Washington many of the principles of sustainable forestry developed by faculty have been adopted worldwide     Tree James Balog,2005-10 The format s more modest but the
