

IMMIGRATION AND THE UNITED STATES EUROPEAN-AMERICANS

European immigrants were an important part of the history of the United States. Early colonists came from England to have religious freedom. In the American colonies, which at that time belonged to England, they would be able to practice religion as they wished. The "Founding Fathers"—the people who wrote the Constitution and established the United States—were descendants of these early colonists.

Some European immigrants came to the Americas less happily than others. Orphans were sent under labor contracts. Some prisoners were sent to become indentured servants: people who had to work for a long time without pay before they were free.

In the 1800s, more waves of European immigrants arrived in the United States. Problems in Europe and the promise of prosperity, or wealth, in the "New World" brought many new arrivals. Many of the newcomers came to Ellis Island—possibly as many as 20 million!

There are about 221 million European-Americans ("white Americans") now living in the United States.
