

What is a Comprehensive Curriculum?

Comprehensive curriculum is a written plan that guides the design of children's goals for learning and development, the experiences children will have to achieve those goals and the way in which adults, both staff and families, will support children's learning to achieve school success. A sound, comprehensive curriculum is more than a resource guide that contains ideas and activities to do with children in your classrooms or homes. It is evidence-based or relies on what research tells us about the way in which children grow and learn and has many different parts or elements. When these elements work together, they provide early childhood professionals with a framework that helps ensure that children have standards-based, fun and challenging experiences that are developmentally, linguistically and culturally appropriate (developmentally appropriate practice-DAP).

Content in a comprehensive curriculum focuses on all domains of learning: social-emotional, physical, cognitive (intellectual), and communication (language and literacy). A curriculum that has been designed to support children's learning in a more specific area such as literacy or mathematics, is a valuable resource that offers additional ideas to help children learn in that domain. It is considered a supplementary curriculum, and while it complements a program's selection of a comprehensive tool, it does not replace a more expansive, broad-scope curriculum that programs must use to support children's integrated learning and development.

A comprehensive curriculum includes these elements:

1. Goals and Objectives

Goals tell us the intent of activities. They are designed to allow for individualization to support meeting each child's needs and interests and should be developed to help children learn and develop in all of the different domains – social emotional, physical, literacy and cognitive. In fact, many activities will help children's skills grow in different goals at the same time.

2. Experiences for Children's Learning

A well-defined comprehensive curriculum helps children achieve their learning goals and objectives. The activities that children experience will encourage them to construct their understanding and knowledge through play, active exploration, and investigation of materials and ideas. The curriculum should promote both child-directed and teacher-directed activities; large group, small group and individualized learning opportunities; and learning during every day routines and experiences. A strong curriculum is flexible and will promote teachers' use of both planned experiences and those experiences that occur naturally as a result of children's interests. Both indoor and outdoor environments are important learning spaces where the large equipment, learning materials, and spatial arrangement of these materials are key to supporting children's learning. The way in which teachers design classroom environments optimizes children's interaction with materials and concepts in ways that assure children's growth and development, and at the same time, provides opportunities for the teacher to authentically assess and build on those learning experiences.
