EU and turkish foreign policies - synergies for the Southern Caucasus? Judith Becker,2008-02-05 Master s Thesis from the year 2007 in the subject Politics Topic European Union grade 8 0 1 6 Maastricht University Faculty of Arts and Social Sciences language English abstract Even though the accession negotiations between the EU and Turkey are projected to last at least another ten to fifteen years or in the worst case even twenty years Turkey could become an important member state for the EU and an asset to its foreign policy For this to happen the foreign policies of the EU and Turkey will have to be supplementary even and especially now in the phase of negotiations Thus the relationships between Turkey on the one hand and Georgia Armenia and Azerbaijan on the other hand have to be friendly to be an asset for the EU However the European

Neighbourhood Policy ENP and enlargement especially with regard to Turkey are mainly researched separately because they are two distinctive EU policies Are the interests and aims of the EU and Turkey in their relations to the countries of the Southern Caucasus compatible and can they lead to synergies Azerbaijan in Global Politics Alexandros Petersen,2009

Azerbaijan Foreign Policy and Government Guide USA (PRD) International Business Publications,2004-05 Political government system government and administrative structure foreign domestic policy international activity and more Updated annually The EU and Azerbaijan Jana Kobzová,Leila Alieva,European Council on Foreign Relations,2012 Hosting this week s Eurovision Song Contest has put Azerbaijan s authoritarian government and its human rights record under international spotlight But attention should also focus on Europe s relations with Azerbaijan which remain guided by narrow energy interests Although Azerbaijan holds more political prisoners than any other Eastern European country the EU has remained timid about human rights violations The EU s failure to pressure the Azerbaijani government to liberalise has brought few benefits and continues to discredit the EU in the eyes of Azerbaijan s society In a new ECFR policy memo Jana Kobzova and Leila Alieva argue that Europe must now change its approach as the Baku government is more vulnerable than it appears Azerbaijan s oil and gas reserves transformed the country and led to a decade of impressive economic growth However with oil running out Azerbaijan s economic model is unsustainable The government has made little effort to diversify the economy away from dependence on hydrocarbons Since 2003 Ilham Aliyev has consolidated power in the presidency and steered Azerbaijan towards a full fledged autocracy The overall human rights situation is worsening The government s heavy handed tactics may eventually backfire By clamping down on independent media and repressing the secular opposition the regime has closed most of the usual channels for expressing dissent Jana Kobzova and Leila Alieva argue that this weakness means that Europe must change its approach to avoid a repetition of the Arab Awakening when it was left looking like a supporter of autocrats Instead the EU s approach towards Azerbaijan needs to be more vocal and bolder The EU needs to redirect more political and financial support to grassroots groups SMEs and independent media who can put more pressure on the regime The EU should be more vocal in demanding greater political pluralism The EU should continue to use its dialogue with the government to assist in areas that are important for Azerbaijan s modernisation and transformation such as governance rule of law or diversification of the country s economy The EU is Azerbaijan s most important trading partner and should use this as a leverage to push for change EU member states should follow the UK s example and introduce new rules banning those non EU nationals accused of human rights abuses from entering the EU this would change the calculations for those in Azerbaijan s elite taking part in human rights violations As Azerbaijan grows more authoritarian Europe faces a choice It can fully embrace this country and its society which is proud of becoming the first ever Muslim liberal democratic republic in 1918 or it can continue its condition free dialogue with the regime Leila Alieva Unless the EU takes a bolder approach towards Azerbaijan it risks finding itself in the same position it was in the southern neighbourhood before the Arab Awakening that of a quiet supporter of autocrats Jana Kobzova Key facts There are more political prisoners in Azerbaijan than in Belarus the political opposition has almost been eliminated the main TV channels are controlled by the government and journalists are regularly threatened The volume of oil extracted in Azerbaijan peaked in 2010 and is set to continue to decline Azerbaijan s budget increasingly relies on transfers from the state oil fund SOFAZ rather than taxes Between 2003 and 2010 the poverty rate dropped from 45% to 9% But in 2011 the country recorded the lowest economic growth among all former Soviet republics Azerbaijan is as corrupt as Russia or Uganda and ranks worse than neighbouring Georgia and Armenia Transparency International The EU s financial levers are limited in 2012 the EU s offer of 31 million in exchange for social and economic reforms was dwarfed by the almost 43 million that Azerbaijan earns every day from oil EU democracy promotion in the Eastern Neighbourhood has failed none of the six Eastern Partnership countries is fully democratic and democracy scores in the region have been worsening Publisher s description
