

The Comprehensive Test of Phonological Processing-Second Edition, or CTOPP-2, was administered in order to assess phonological processing abilities related to reading. The CTOPP-2 is an individually administered, norm-referenced assessment tool that consists of seven subtests measuring the three areas of phonological processing that are highly associated with success in reading and writing: Phonological Awareness, Phonological Memory and Rapid Symbolic Naming ability. This assessment indicates a child's strengths and weaknesses within these areas. Phonological Awareness is the ability to access to the phonological structure of oral language. Phonological Memory is the ability to code information phonologically for temporary storage in working or short-term memory. Rapid Naming ability is the retrieval of phonological information from memory and the ability to complete a sequence of operations quickly and repeatedly. In addition to their role in learning to read, phonological processing abilities also support effective mathematical calculation, listening comprehension, and reading comprehension.

Subtest	Scaled Score	%ile Rank	Composite Area	Composite Score	%ile Rank	Descriptive Term
Elision	5	5	Phonological Awareness	86	18	Below Average
Blending Words	9	37
Phoneme Isolation	9	37
Memory for Digits	5	5	Phonological Memory	95	37	Average
Non-word Repetition	13	84
Rapid Digit Naming	8	25	Rapid Symbolic Naming	88	21	Below Average
Rapid Letter Naming	8	25
Blending Nonwords	3	1	Alternative Phonological Awareness	73	3	Poor
Segmenting Nonwords	8	25

Phonological awareness is an awareness of and access to the sound structure of oral language. Children with well-developed phonological awareness learn to read more easily than do children with poorly developed phonological awareness. $Name's composite score in phonological awareness places $Name in the Below Average category for a student $Name age. The Elision subtest required $Name to delete, or take out, certain sounds in words or certain parts of words, such as one half of a compound word, or the beginning, middle, or ending sound of a word. The Blending Words subtest required $Name to put together parts of a compound word, or single sounds to make up a complex word. The Phoneme Isolation subtest required $Name to identify target sounds in words such as the first and last sounds of presented words. $Name scored in the Poor range for the Elision subtest, and in the average range for Blending and Phoneme Isolation. This suggests $Name struggles with manipulating sounds out from words, but is more adept at identifying them and putting them together within words. Additional measures utilizing nonwords create an alternative phonological score. Here, she struggled considerably with blending nonwords, with her score falling in the Very Poor range. When segmenting them, she was able to do so at the lower side of Average compared to her peers. This suggests that if presented with new words, she may have issues taking the individual sounds and putting them together, where as with familiar words she can utilize context to assist her. Her ability to segment out sounds remained at an Average level.

Phonological memory represents the examinee's ability to code information phonologically for temporary storage in working or short-term memory. A deficit does not inevitably lead to poor reading of familiar material but is more likely to impair decoding of new words, particularly words that are long enough to decode bit by bit, as a means of storing intermediate sounds. A deficit in phonological memory may not
