Girl Under Construction:

Under Construction Sagit Betser, 2019 In this dissertation I examine a summer maker program that provides high school aged girls with a space and a community to pursue their maker interests and develop their identities as girls and makers The program took place in a girls only space for design and making that uses a distinctive approach focused on giving girls the opportunity to design and build large objects using a combination of power tools and digital fabrication by using practices tools and materials that are traditionally seen as masculine and belonging to men I present the analysis and findings in three chapters each composed as a stand alone paper In the first study I draw on entrance interviews as the main data source to learn how girls from underrepresented communities imagined their participation what aspects of the program piqued their interest and how their everyday experiences in their home communities affected their aspirations for their participation in the program Findings indicate that girls saw their participation in the program as an opportunity to experiment with possible desired identities in a way that is not available to them in their daily lives where they experience STEM based spaces as ones that don't see girls I describe several themes that emerged from girls stories as they engaged in making meaning in light of their decision to participate Girls saw the program as a place to examine their identity as girls makers and young adults They felt that to engage in creating new stories for themselves they needed the space to be with like minded girls and needed this space to be separated from their home and school communities They looked for a space in which they could experiment with alternative ways of being and doing In the second study I investigate the resources that were available to girls either through the program or from other figured worlds in their construction of identity in the intersection of gender and practice The findings of this study demonstrate four paths of identity resources through which girls engaged in playful explorations of alternative identities a entering spaces as legitimate members of a community of practice b produced objects and artifacts as carriers of self understanding between figured worlds c gender presentation practices in refiguring the self and d building relationships of emotional support and care The third paper contributes to the line of research that focuses on collaboration in maker projects with the goal to broaden our perspective on the mechanisms that allow girls to reach shared understanding while driving their design forward In this study I transition from the overall look on girls experiences to an examination of the moment by moment interactional level In the analysis I focus on one group of girls in their effort to co organize and coordinate their interactions and their working space as they collaborated to design a wooden structure for a client in the community I look at the roles of bodies materials and discourse as resources in the coordination of their design and building processes as they drove their work forward while maintaining the individuality of each of the members engaged in the process I demonstrate that each girl used the resources in a way that allowed her to alternate between a space of mutual attention to a space in which each could figure out the problems for herself and have the opportunity to position herself as a unique contributor I show that each girl was able to approach the project as a member of a specific community of discourse The co construction of new solutions was possible when participants were able to communicate across disciplinary discourses These three studies together provide a more nuanced description of girls who are interested in girls only maker experiences their motivations and the types of opportunities that allow them to materialize their imagination of figuring themselves in this setting Resilience Kenneth Oldfield,Richard Gregory Johnson

Researching Race in Education Adrienne D. Dixon,Gloria J. Ladson-Billings,Cecilia E. Suarez,William T. Trent,James D. Anderson,2021-01-18 The question of why we need to think about how we research race demands a conceptualization of race that captures both its social construction and its temporal evolution We need both an understanding of race and clarity about how we talk about it in our design and conduct of research and in how we interpret and apply it in our findings As a field we can use research on race and racism in education to help construct social change Our purpose with this volume is to underscore the persistence of the discriminatory actions processes and the normalization of the use of race and class conditions to justify the existing and growing disparity between the quality of life and opportunity for middle class and more affluent Whites and that for people of color and people of color who live in poverty As editors of this volume we wonder what more we could learn and understand about the process and condition of race if we dare to ask bold questions about race and racism and commit to methods and analyses that respect the experiences and knowledges of our research participants and partners The Bohemian ,1908 No Magic Bullet Allan M. Brandt,1987 The recent epidemic of AIDS and herpes virus has called into question not only the ability of the medical profession to treat venereal disease but its willingness to do so No Magic Bullet a perceptive analysis of the treatment of venereal diseases since the 1880s places these questions in critical historical perspective Beginning with Victorian hysteria about syphilis and continuing to our current concerns about AIDS Allan Brandt recounts the various medical military and public health responses to venereal diseases that have arisen over the years Brandt demonstrates that Americans tendency to view sexually transmitted disease as both a punishment for sexual misconduct and an index of social decay has seriously impeded efforts to develop magic bullets the miracle drugs that would effectively halt the spread of infection Resolving the conflicts between the medical and moral approaches to venereal disease he argues is the first step toward developing effective policies for disease control Annual Report of the
