

a 12-volt, direct-current system powered by a 30-ampere engine-driven generator. The 12-volt storage battery is located on the upper right-hand forward portion of the firewall.

CIRCUIT BREAKERS.

All electrical circuits in the airplane are protected by circuit breakers. The stall warning unit, flap position indicator, turn- and- bank indicator and the optional gyro horizon light lights circuits are protected by a single automatically resetting circuit breaker mounted behind the instrument panel. The remaining circuits are protected by "push-in-over" breakers on the instrument panel. These can be pulled out to lock the circuit. The name of the circuit is shown above each circuit breaker.

LANDING LIGHTS.

The landing lights switch is the split rocker type. To turn on one lamp for landing, push the right half of the switch "ON." To turn on both lamps for landing, push the left half of the switch "ON."

NAVIGATION LIGHTS.

STALL WARNING INDICATOR.

The stall warning indicator is an electric horn controlled by a transmitter sent to the leading edge of the left wing. This system is in operation whenever the master switch is turned on. The transmitter responds to changes in the stallflow over the leading edge of the wing as a stall is approached. In straight-ahead test landing flight, the warning horn will sound 5 to 10 MPH ahead of the stall.

Under safe flight conditions, the only time you will hear the warning horn will be a short beep as you land.

WING FLAPS.

The wing flaps switch controls the position of the electrically-operated wing flaps. The "UP" and "DOWN" positions of the switch are momentary hold-on positions; the switch automatically returns to the center (off) position when released. The flaps can be lowered or raised to any position between 0° and 40°, and stopped at any position by allowing the switch to return to the centered (off) position. The flaps will remain in the selected position until the switch is moved to raise or lower them. Flap position is shown by an electric flap position indicator on the instrument panel.

CABIN HEATING AND VENTILATING SYSTEM.

Fresh air for heating and ventilating the cabin is supplied by a manifold cabin heater and two ventilating air scoops, one on each side of the fuselage just forward of the cabin door.

The temperature and amount of air entering the cabin is controlled by three knobs on the instrument panel. The "CABIN HEAT" knob operates a heat inlet valve at the firewall to regulate the amount of heat entering the cabin from the manifold heater. The "CABIN AIR" knob operates the air scoop on the left side of the fuselage to regulate the amount of fresh air entering the cabin. Fresh air from this air scoop is used in conjunction with heat from the manifold heater for mixing the correct amount of heat and airflow into the cabin. The "AUX. CABIN AIR" knob operates the air scoop on the right side of the fuselage providing additional outside air for summer ventilation. All three control knobs are the double-button type having friction locks to permit intermediate settings. To operate the control knobs, depress the buttons, releasing the locks; then adjust the knobs.

For cabin ventilation, pull the "CABIN AIR" knob out. To reduce the air temperature, pull the "CABIN HEAT" knob out approximately 1/2" for a small amount of heat. Additional heat is available by pulling the "CABIN HEAT" knob out further; maximum heat is available with the "CABIN HEAT" knob pulled full out, and the "CABIN AIR" knob pushed full in. The temperature and amount of flow into the cabin can be regulated to any degree desired by manipulation of these two controls in relation to each other. When additional ventilating air is desired, pull the "AUX.

CABIN AIR" knob out.

A rotary-type control knob, labeled "DEFROST" regulates the airflow for windshield defrosting. With the control knob rotated full counter-clockwise, the flow of defrosting air is shut off; rotation of the knob clockwise permits air flow to the windshield, the amount depending upon the degree of rotation toward full open. The temperature of defrosting air is dependent upon the setting of the "CABIN AIR" and "CABIN HEAT" knobs.

Two ventilators, one in each upper corner of the windshield, are provided to supply additional ventilating air for the pilot and front seat passenger. To operate, pull the ventilator out and rotate to the desired position. Four additional hot and cold ventilators are installed in the ceiling of the rear cabin area, for ventilation to the rear seat passengers. To regulate the flow of air, turn the control ring on the rim of the ventilator.

CABIN AND BAGGAGE DOORS.

Two cabin doors are provided, each incorporating a flush-type door handle on the outside and a conventional door handle on the inside. Both doors can be locked from the inside by rotating the inside door handles forward and down as far as they will go. Also, the left door can be locked from the outside by means of a key-operated lock. The same key that is used for the ignition also locks the cabin door, as well as the baggage door.

A door step is in the front edge of each
