

In addition to the three forces developed by the section main structural

The larger twin-row engines have complex construction than engines. For example, the crankshaft E-3000 engine is composed of the mainshaft section, four crankshaft main sections (the four main, the front crank, the rear crank, and the rear main sections), the rear main and tapered bearing, the supercharger front bearing, the supercharger rear bearing, and the supercharger rear housing cover. Pratt and Whitney engines of comparable size incorporate the same basic sections, although

The shape of nose sections varies considerably. In general, it is either tapered or round in order to place the metal under tension or compression instead of shear stresses. A tapered nose section is used quite frequently on divertive, low-powered engines, because extra space is not required to house the propeller reduction gear. It is usually cast of
