Central Asia Dianne Louise Smith, 1996 In January 1996 the U S Army War College s Strategic Studies Institute SSI and the Center for Strategic and International Studies CSIS hosted a conference on Asian Security to the Year 2000 One focus of the conferees was the growing relevance of events in Central Asia Perhaps nowhere on the continent was the Cold War transformation in the security environment more dramatic than in Central Asia There the sudden retraction of Soviet power and decline in superpower competition was rapidly followed by the creation of new states whose prospects for legitimacy development and independent survival were at best uncertain The half decade that has followed the dissolution of the Soviet Union has not been sufficient time for any of the vast challenges facing Central Asia to have been addressed definitively Nor can we be confident that a stable regional system has coalesced Yet the past 5 years have produced an emerging pattern of relations amenable to tentative analysis Lieutenant Colonel Dianne Smith of SSI details the complex problems facing the region and then turns her attention to Central Asia s evolving security structure By involving the Great Game analogy she takes the perspective that for this part of the continent it is the nations surrounding the region that will play the primary role in shaping its future although the new Central Asian nations are participants not pawns in this struggle for influence Colonel Smith s analysis focuses on the interests and actions of five of those surrounding nations Iran Pakistan India Russia and China Each has significant interests in Central Asia and each thus far has tempered to some degree its actions to advance those interests in recognition of the competing objectives of the others For the United States a power vacuum in Central Asia seems a remote concern at first blush

Smith, 1996 In January 1996 the U S Army War College s Strategic Studies Institute SSI and the Center for Strategic and International Studies CSIS hosted a conference on Asian Security to the Year 2000 One focus of the conferees was the growing relevance of events in Central Asia Perhaps nowhere on the continent was the Cold War transformation in the security environment more dramatic than in Central Asia There the sudden retraction of Soviet power and decline in superpower competition was rapidly followed by the creation of new states whose prospects for legitimacy development and independent survival were at best uncertain The half decade that has followed the dissolution of the Soviet Union has not been sufficient time for any of the vast challenges facing Central Asia to have been addressed definitively Nor can we be confident that a stable regional system has coalesced Yet the past 5 years have produced an emerging pattern of relations amenable to tentative analysis That is the task Lieutenant Colonel Dianne Smith of SSI undertook for the Asian Security conference In this monograph she details the complex problems facing the region and then turns her attention to Central Asia s evolving security structure By involving the Great Game analogy she takes the perspective that for this part of the continent it is the nations surrounding the region that will play the primary role in shaping its future although the new Central Asian nations are participants not pawns in this struggle for influence Colonel Smith s analysis focuses on the interests and actions of five of those surrounding nations Iran Pakistan India Russia and China Each has significant interests in Central Asia and each thus far has tempered to some degree its actions to advance those interests in recognition of the competing objectives of the others For the United States a power vacuum in Central Asia seems a remote concern at first blush Colonel Smith's review makes clear however that the paramount American stake lies in helping to ensure that Central Asia does not become a game gone bad that draws the great Asian powers into conflict Her survey concludes with policy recommendations toward that end

Central Asia: a New Great Game? Dianne L. Smith, 2013-02-02 Is there a new Great Game being played out in Central Asia Boris Rumer argues that the successor states to the Russian and British empires have renewed the struggle for hegemony in the center of the Asian continent As the world shifts from a bipolar to a multipolar focus the nations of Asia search for new trans regional security arrangements More specifically the breakup of the Soviet Union and the creation of five Central Asian republics Kazakhstan Kyrgyzstan Uzbekistan Turkmenistan and Tajikistan have complicated the security relations of the Asian states See Figure 1 But this new struggle is not a repeat of the 19th century Great Game by which the Central Asian states are but pawns of great powers as they jockey for power and position Instead the Central Asian states themselves are active players in this struggle for power in a unique geo strategic position to influence immediate neighbors Russia China and Iran and even beyond into the Indian subcontinent Once considered a backwater of little importance during the Soviet era Central Asia could play a pivotal role in Asian politics in the next decade Enlargement and Engagement set domestic political stability regional peace and the maturation of market economies in the five Central Asian states as policy goals of the United States The key to Asian especially Central Asian regional security is economic A strong vibrant market economy is a prerequisite for political stability and the growth of democracy Political stability however is itself a key element to economic development peace in the region especially in Tajikistan Afghanistan and Kashmir must be gained before that economic takeoff can occur Serious political economic ethnic religious and social challenges confront the five new Central Asian states in this quest for regional security How each state is able to confront and resolve these problems will determine its ability to emerge as a viable force in this struggle for influence in this new Great Game Instability might seem to provide opportunities for states such as Iran or China to expand their influence but the risks that such instability would ricochet back on them are too great Thus Iran Pakistan India Russia and China each seek in their own way to promote stability within Central Asia while expanding their own regional influence Implications for American security from this struggle derive from the U S desire to prevent existing problems within Central Asia from escalating into crises that might engage Iran Pakistan India Russia or China Therefore we must first identify those centrifugal forces threatening Central Asia then review each of these states in turn to analyze their behavior identify their regional objectives and state policies in relation to Central Asia and evaluate the impact of Central Asia upon their own security Doing so offers a better perspective on our own strategic interests in post Cold War Asia

Central Asia Dianne Louise Smith, 1996 Jihadi Groups, Nuclear Pakistan, and the New Great Game, The

New Great Game Thomas Fingar, 2016-03-23 China's rise has elicited envy, admiration and fear among its neighbors. Although much has been written about this, previous coverage portrays events as determined almost entirely by Beijing. Such accounts minimize or ignore the other side of the equation, namely what individuals, corporate actors and governments in other countries do to attract, shape, exploit or deflect Chinese involvement. The New Great Game analyzes and explains how Chinese policies and priorities interact with the goals and actions of other countries in the region. To explore the reciprocal nature of relations between China and countries in South and Central Asia, The New Great Game employs numerous policy-relevant lenses: geography, culture, history, resource endowments and levels of development. This volume seeks to discover what has happened during the three decades of China's rise and why it happened as it did, with the goal of deeper understanding of Chinese and other national priorities and policies and of discerning patterns among countries and issues.

Jihadi Groups, Nuclear Pakistan, and the New Great Game Mohammed E. Ahrari, 2001 For the United States and other nations concerned with security in South and Central Asia, one of the most ominous trends has been the growing influence of Jihadist groups in Pakistan, which feel obligated to wage holy war against everything that they perceive as non-Islamic. Their objective would be a Pakistani government similar to the Taliban regime in Afghanistan. The danger this would pose to regional stability and U.S. interests is clear. The author assesses Jihadist groups from the framework of a new Great Game for influence in Central Asia involving an array of states. He argues that if this competition leads to increased violence outside states including the United States could be drawn in. On the other hand, if the region stabilizes, it could provide solid economic and political partners for the United States. A well-designed American strategy, Ahrari contends, might help avoid crises or catastrophe.

book analyses the evolution of India's foreign policy towards Central Asia after the end of the Cold War. Focusing on the development of India's foreign policy towards Central Asia between 1991 and 2020, this book investigates the explanatory and intervening variables of the policy towards the region to identify its goals, assumptions, motivations, and instruments. The preliminary assumption is that India's foreign policy towards Central Asia has evolved after the Cold War from a passive approach to an active participant in Central Asian security, economic, and socio-cultural spheres. This is also seen due to the emergence of the five Central Asian countries as independent states which have a tremendous strategic significance due to their geographical location, huge hydrocarbon reserve, and potential economic opportunities. India expanded its policy to the Extended Neighbourhood, adding East Central and West Asia to the existing South Asian neighbourhood. Since then, India has been engaging with the region, considering the growing geostrategic and geo-economic significance of the region and using the available foreign policy instruments. This book presents a comprehensive assessment of India's foreign policy behaviour, evolution, with proper analysis of the explanatory, external, and intervening internal variables that influence India's behaviours towards the region. It shows that India also aims to be a very influential power in Central Asia. This book will be an excellent resource for students and researchers of area and global studies, international relations, Asian Politics, and South and Central Asia. The monograph then addresses the policy implications for the United States of the shifting regional picture in Central Asia. Despite the fissures within the SCO and the competitive tendencies within the Sino-Russian partnership, the monograph asserts that the United States will not have an easy time achieving its aims in Central Asia.

Tug of War Mikhail Troitskiy, Fen Olser Hampson, 2017-12-15. Conflicts in Eurasia have been receiving significant attention in the last few years from political scientists and international relations scholars. The geographic area of Eurasia lies at the intersection of global and regional conflicts and coordination games. On the one hand, regional controversies in Eurasia often affect relations among the great powers on a global scale. For instance, Russia believes it is engaged in a clash with the United States and its allies in post-Soviet Eurasia and that by obstructing EU and US policies in its neighbourhood, Moscow not only protects its security interests but also precipitates the demise of the US-centric world order. On the other hand, global rivalries can either exacerbate tensions or facilitate negotiated solutions across Eurasia, mostly as a result of competitive behaviour among major powers in conflict mediation. Few scholars have focused on the negotiation process or brought together the whole variety of seemingly disparate yet comparable cases This volume edited by two global security experts one from Canada and one from Russia examines negotiations that continue after the hot phase of a conflict has ended and the focus becomes the search for lasting security solutions Tug of War brings together conflict and security experts from Russia Eurasia and the West to tackle the overarching question how useful has the process of negotiation been in resolving or mitigating different conflicts and coordination problems in Eurasia compared to attempts at exploiting or achieving a decisive advantage over one's opponents
