

The up position of the switch, labeled "HIGH," is used for engine operation if the engine-driven pump should fail, or for vapor purging in extremely hot weather. When the switch is in this position, the pump can operate at two flow rates depending upon the setting of the throttle. With the throttle at a cruise setting, the pump is operating at maximum capacity, supplying sufficient fuel flow to maintain flight with the engine-driven pump inoperative. When the throttle is moved toward the closed position, as during let-down, landing and taxiing, a mechanically-actuated switch electrically reduces the auxiliary fuel pump flow rate by means of a resistor in the pump power circuit. This action automatically prevents an excessively rich mixture during these periods of reduced engine speed.

The auxiliary fuel pump is not to be on "HIGH" during normal operation, because, with the engine-driven pump functioning, a fuel/air ratio considerably richer than best power is produced. If fuel vapor is affecting engine operation, the vapor may be purged by turning the auxiliary pump to "HIGH" and leaning the mixture as required to prevent excessively rich mixture. Successful vapor purging is evidenced by smooth engine operation and steady and normal fuel flow indications with the auxiliary fuel pump switch "OFF."

NOTE

If the auxiliary fuel pump switch is accidentally turned to "HIGH" (with master switch on) with the engine stopped, intake manifold will be flooded unless the mixture is in idle cut-off.

The center position of the auxiliary fuel pump switch is "OFF."

FUEL STRAINER DRAIN KNOB.

A fuel strainer drain knob marked "STRAINER DRAIN" provides a quick, convenient method of draining water and sediment that may have collected in the fuel strainer. The strainer is located on the lower front side of the firewall.

About two ounces of fuel (3 to 4 seconds of drain knob operation) should be drained from the strainer before the initial flight of the day to insure against the presence of water or sediment in the fuel.

The spring-loaded drain valve in the strainer is open when the fuel strainer drain knob is pulled out all the way. The drain valve automatically closes when the knob is released.

ELECTRICAL SYSTEM.

Electrical energy is supplied by a 12-volt, direct-current system powered by an engine-driven generator. The 12-volt storage battery is located aft of the rear baggage compartment wall.

A red generator warning light labeled "GEN," gives an indication of
