Abstract

1. What is the purpose of the study?

From the 1980s to the present, business ethics and corporate social responsibility have become an integral part of business education and practice. This has led to the development of various frameworks and standards for business ethics, such as the ISO 26000 standard and the UN Global Compact. These frameworks and standards provide a common language and set of principles for businesses to follow, which helps to ensure consistency and comparability across different organizations and industries. This, in turn, allows stakeholders to make more informed decisions about the ethical performance of businesses and to hold them accountable for their actions.
