

discourses do not appear to be discrete discursive practices as postcolonial scholarship takes them to be. By exploring the ideological correspondence between the two discourses, Bose provides both a critique of the binary categorization of colonial discourse in postcolonial theory and a more nuanced evaluation of the formation of colonial and nationalist subjectivities in the colonial context. Organizing Empire thus makes a significant contribution to the growing body of postcolonial discourse.

RON SCOLLON and SUZIE WONG SCOLLON (2003). Discourses in Place: Language in the Material World. London: Routledge. xiii + 242 pp.

Discourses in Place has 10 chapters plus preface, glossary, references and index. Except for chapters 1, 5 and 10, which serve respectively as introduction, interlude and conclusion, each of the chapters has two sections, one on theory and the other on practice. The theory sections develop the central concepts of the theory of geosemiotics, whereas the practice sections give supplementary materials as well as suggestions for classroom activities. Because the theory of geosemiotics is a major concern of the volume, this review focuses on the theory, first introducing it, and then adding a few words of comment.

Discourses in Place locates meaning in the richness and complexity of the lived world rather than just in the language itself, and for this perspective Scollon and Scollon coined the term 'geosemiotics.' They argue that people can interpret the meaning of public texts only by considering the social and physical world in which these texts are located. In their argument, geosemiotics consists of three sub-systems: interaction order, visual semiotics and place semiotics; and the focus of the field of geosemiotics is 'indexicality.' The basic concept of geosemiotics is outlined in chapter 1, and in chapter 2 the authors concentrate on the concept of indexicality. They first point out that all signs, whether they are icons or symbols, achieve their meanings through properties of indexicality. They then discuss indexicality in language in terms of space, social relationships, and time. They come to the conclusion that a major part of the meaning of a sign is produced only through the placement of that sign in the real world in contiguity with other objects in the world.

Chapter 3 is devoted to the elaboration of the concept of interaction order. Scollon and Scollon identify four main semiotic resources of interaction order: the sense of time, perceptual spaces, interpersonal distances and personal front. They believe that these non-verbal semiotic resources are indexical in meaning and central to the production and interpretation of discourse in place. They also list 11 main units of the interaction order: singles, withs, files and processions, queues, contacts, service encounters, conversational encounters, meetings, people-processing encounters, platform events, and celebrative occasions.

Discourses In Place Language In The Material World:

Discourses in Place Ron Scollon, Suzie Wong Scollon, 2003-12-08 Discourses in Place is essential reading for anyone with an interest in language and the way we communicate. Written by leaders in the field, this text argues that we can only interpret the meaning of public texts like road signs, notices, and brand logos by considering the social and physical world that surrounds them. Drawing on a wide range of real examples from signs in the Chinese mountains to urban centres in Austria, Italy, North America, and Hong Kong, this textbook equips students with the methodology and models they need to undertake their own research in geosemiotics, the key interface between semiotics and the physical world. Discourses in Place is highly illustrated, containing real examples of language in the material world, including a how-to-use-this-book section, group and individual activities, and a glossary of key terms.

Discourses on Language and Integration Gabrielle Hogan-Brun, Clare Mar-Molinero, Patrick Stevenson, 2009-03-20 One of the most pressing issues in contemporary European societies is the need to promote integration and social inclusion in the context of rapidly increasing migration. A particular challenge confronting national governments is how to accommodate speakers of an ever-increasing number of languages within what in most cases are still perceived as monolingual indigenous populations. This has given rise to public debates in many countries on controversial policies imposing a requirement of competence in a national language and culture as a condition for acquiring citizenship. However, these debates are frequently conducted almost entirely at a national level within each state, with little if any attention paid to the broader European context. At the same time, further EU enlargement and the ongoing rise in the rate of migration into and across Europe suggest that the salience of these issues is likely to continue to grow. This volume offers a critical analysis of these debates and emerging discourses on integration and challenges the assumptions underlying the new language testing regimes.

Language, Multimodal Interaction and Transaction Xuehua Xiang, 2021-09-08 Xuehua Xiang examines multimodal interaction in the marketplace in a multilingual town at the juncture of urbanization in Southern China. Using a collection of data that span nearly 20 years from ethnographic fieldwork, Language, Multimodal Interaction and Transaction studies a Southern Chinese marketplace, analyzing multimodal talk in interaction in the traditional marketplace as both an economic mechanism and a localized social space. Focusing on how buyers and sellers interact to complete transactions as the marketplace shifts from sedimentations of road-side peddling to centralized built space and further to corporate e-commerce, Xiang takes into account the Janus nature of language as both incurring transaction costs and a powerful tool of information and control. By analyzing the socializing functions of language in the marketplace, outside of and beyond economic dealings, the study additionally documents and depicts the roles of affect and morality in marketplace encounters. The study offers an overarching framework for future research on the mediating role of language and multimodal interaction in economic activities as well as on the interplay of information, knowledge, affect, and morality in social encounters.

Language Mixing and Code-Switching in Writing Mark Sebba, Shahrzad Mahootian, Carla Jonsson, 2012-05-22 Code switching or the alternation of languages by bilinguals has attracted an enormous amount of attention from researchers. However, most research has focused on spoken language and the resultant theoretical frameworks have been based on spoken code switching. This volume presents a collection of new work on the alternation of languages in written form. Written language alternation has existed since ancient times. It is present today in a great deal of traditional media and also exists in newer, less regulated forms such as email, SMS messages and blogs. Chapters in this volume cover both historical and contemporary language mixing practices in a large range of language pairs and multilingual communities. The research collected here explores diverse approaches including corpus linguistics, Critical Discourse Analysis, literacy studies, ethnography and analyses of the visual/textual aspects of written data. Each chapter, based on empirical research of multilingual writing, presents methodological approaches as models for other researchers. New perspectives developed in this book include analysis specific to written rather than spoken discourse, approaches from the new literacy studies treating mixed language literacy from a practice perspective, a focus on both traditional and new media types and the semiotics of both text and the visual environment.
