Food and Nutrition

For general suggestions on how to teach each section of a unit, see pages v–vii of this Teacher's Manual.

Unit Opener (page 49)

1. With books closed, write Food and Nutrition on the board. Clarify the meaning of nutrition by asking the class What foods are good for you? What foods are not good for you? Write two lists on the board, one for nutritious foods (spinach, oranges, eggs, etc.), and one for foods that are not nutritious (ice cream, candy, soda, etc.).
2. Ask the class What are some jobs of people who study food and nutrition? (Chefs, cooks, school and hospital meal planners / preparers, etc.) Would you like to work in the field of food and nutrition? Why or why not?
3. Have students look at the content areas at the bottom of the page. Explain that each chapter will be about food and nutrition, but it will also relate to one of these content areas: agriculture, culinary arts, and biology. Elicit, or explain as necessary, what kinds of things are studied in each secondary content area. (Agriculture is the practice or work of farming. Culinary arts is the study or practice of the preparation of food. Biology is the scientific study of living things.)
4. Have students look at the pictures and the titles of the three chapters. Read through the short “teaser” blurbs with the class, and answer any questions that arise.

Chapter 7 How the Kiwi Got Its Name

1 Topic Preview (page 50)

Part A

1. Have students briefly describe the picture to a partner and name as many of the fruits as they can.
2. Review the directions, and make sure that students understand all the fruits in the list.
3. Have students share their answers in a class discussion. Have them also consider the benefits of fruit.

Part B

1. Before students discuss the questions, have them read the chapter title and look at the picture again.
2. For question 1, clarify the English names of the fruits as necessary. Elicit, or point out if necessary, which fruit is the kiwi.
3. For question 2, have students work in small groups and then share their answers with the class.
