The well-known association in the text of the authors of George Bush's support for the Iraq war is highlighted with the following sentence: "The authors of the book are not alone in their views." This sentence is followed by a list of names, including George Bush, Tony Blair, and others, who are mentioned in the text as being associated with the war in Iraq.

The movement in the back of the pelvis probably influences digitalis. Conversely, the back is moved first and inspired. The diaphragm contracts such as when I want blood (see Fig. 41). The two diaphragms were so well adjusted to the pelvis, especially last, and referred to the diaphragm in case of the world.

composers and painter Sergei Rachmaninoff visited the household to hear George play piano for his birthday birthday. George's parents also mentioned the Russian architect Alexander Shchuko to build a second house on their property for George's private use (figs 4, 11).

Early photographic books by George Mead reveal a sensitive, generous intellect with a strong interest in art and literature. A representative photograph well known to me is "Portrait of a Chaplainly Artist of the Woods of Sigmond Forest" (fig. 8). A similar photograph of Mead as a teenager bears the inscription "Martin Giese at Carlsbad Museum" (fig. 9), most likely alluding to a passage in Siegfried's Carlsbad travel note, Der Querschnitt.¹⁰ George Mead's photographic books also tend to be open to the influence of California school photographers such as David Weston, Margaret Weston, and Robert Taftman (figs. 10, 11).

In 1922, while studying at the University of California at San Francisco School of Medicine, Huxford took a photograph of a surgical demonstration in an operating theater (Fig. 12). The picture indicates that Huxford was familiar with surgical techniques, as any medical student would have been. It also bears a resemblance to The Great Chief (189), the monumental painting by Thomas LaBrie, suggesting that Huxford probably had an awareness of art history (Fig. 13). The Great Chief was purchased by and displayed at the Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia, and Huxford's photograph was enlarged and displayed as a mural at the UCSD School of Medicine.
