of Proportionate Punishment Jesper Ryberg,2007-11-10 The philosophical discussion of state punishment is well on in years In contrast with a large number of ethical problems which are concerned with right and wrong in relation to a narrowly specified area of human life and practice and which hav at least since the early 70 s been regarded as a legitimate part of philosophical thinking constituting the area of applied ethics reflections on punishment can be traced much further back in the history of western philosophy This is not surprising That the stately mandated infliction of death suffering or deprivation on citizens should be met with hesitation from which ethical reflections may depar seems obvious Such a practice certainly calls for some persuasive justification It is therefore natural that reflective minds have for a long time devoted attention to punishment and that the question of how a penal system can be justified has constituted the central question in philosophical discussion Though it would certainly be an exaggeration to claim that the justification question is the only aspect of punishment with which philosophers have been concerned there has in most periods been a clear tendency to regard this as the cardinal issue Comparatively much less attention has been devoted to the more precise questions of how and how much criminals should be punished for their respective wrong doings This may of course be due to several reasons Harvard
