

novel talks about the celebration of separate brief ceremonies, and this describes why the story itself is a ceremony. In the novel's plots, the author chooses various ceremonies as they either start or end.

To Tayo, these ceremonies were a transitional stage since ancient times in Pueblo. The community members performed rituals after the warriors return from fighting because they avoided stains caused by fighting destruction (Walther 9).

Leslie Marmon Silko as a Storyteller

Storytelling is an aspect that happens to human beings because they are capable of using words to pass information amongst individuals and generations. The concept of storytelling is only possible for people because the trial of teaching non-human creatures failed.

According to the Ceremony, the word story refers to factors that contribute to the identification of a story. A story can be either real or fictitious, contains true situations or fantasy. Therefore, a story provides the narrator or writer with the freedom to explore any genre around the world. The analysis shows that the novel "Ceremony" backs this concept because it contains all forms of freedom in telling its stories (Walther 3).

In the novel, storytelling focuses on how the Native American traditions used to tell stories.

Previously, all the Native American cultures on biology, history, morality, medicine, among others, transferred among different generations through storytelling in their culture. The title of an "official storyteller" belonged to the elders who made storytelling to become a famous event. The main goal of storytelling is to transfer information among generations. Stories are rhythmic.

Indeed, they have repetition and sometimes presented in the custom of a song. In the novel "Ceremony", these ways of storytelling occurred as a poem, which surrounded the novel narrative in both the beginning and end. The stories told in the novel Ceremony about Pueblo culture are real stories that exist outside the context (Walther 3).

In Ceremony, there is a narration of different brief stories, which include stories on war told by Harley, Emo among other soldiers. We also see Old Betony and Night Swan tell part of their stories as Tayo claims to remember a story that Rocky told him. Old Betonie claims that there is a time that Tayo's aunt distracted him during a part of the story. At the start of the novel, it ensures that the whole narrative in it represents a story.
