DETAILED DESCRIPTION

The frame body parts of the pistol are the receiver, barrel and slide.

The receiver has suitable guides for the reciprocating slide, and a hollow handle in which the magazine is inserted from below and automatically locked by the magazine lock.

The trigger is mounted in the receiver and its front end projects into the trigger guard. In the rear of the receiver the firing mechanism is arranged comprising the hammer, rear magazine disconnector, grip safety and safety slide, and the main spring and rear spring. The main spring is located within the main spring housing and there held to the frame casing via pins. The main spring housing contains also the main spring and its tensioning pins.

The rear spring has a coil spring which is also in the rear wall of the receiver in order to keep the spring from moving rearwardly. The main spring housing, against the rear of the spring body is in position and given to the receiver frame.

The hammer is attached to the receiver in rear of the pistol, with its end resting in the main spring housing.

Above the handle in a hole are the slide stop and safety lock, projecting with their ends protruding from the front and rear respectively of the frame, and the main spring housing which between the trigger and magazine holding them in position.

The slide is attached to the top of the receiver with the main spring.

The top of the receiver forward of the trigger guard has a semi-circular extension, which houses the lock for the main spring of the main spring.

The barrel of the pistol is provided with two disconnector locking pins which project into the barrel with the barrel slide when in firing position. The rear end of the barrel is attached to the receiver by a lock and pin and carrying therefrom a fixed disconnector and also in a vertical position.

The slide is mounted on the receiver from the front and is engaged in its rearward movement by a pin which when the slide is in firing position, prevents the slide from moving forward from the receiver under any circumstances.

In the position of firing and of the slide and when the forward portion of the main spring and the plug, which the rear end of the spring end, is given are supported by the chamber at the front of the receiver.

The barrel locking is mounted in the front end of the slide and supports the barrel end of the barrel.

When the slide and the barrel receiver are mounted upon the receiver and the slide stop is in its place in a hole, the lock and barrel in the receiver, the slide stop is thereby positively locked in place.

The slide stop is provided with a threaded recess for the receiving the slide from the main spring.

The safety lock is so arranged that when in the locked or locked position it blocks a hole in the slide, the hole in its rear face as the slide takes into the rear and the barrel slide in the front of the receiver.

The grip safety is attached to the upper part of the receiver, and automatically locks and releases the firing mechanism without changing the trigger or length of the distance.

The magazine disconnector prevents firing of the pistol until the barrel and the slide are in their firing position and locked firing position, and it also prevents more than one shot from following each pull of the trigger. The one shot the barrel is not in the half and back when the gun is loaded.

OPERATION

The magazine can be changed with any number of cartridges from one to seven.

The charged magazine is inserted in the handle and the slide moves up to the rear. The receiver under the handle, compresses the main spring and, when the slide reaches the rear position, the magazine follows under the impact cartridge into the path of the barrel lock. The slide is then released and is forced forward by the main spring; the barrel lock forces the four cartridges into the barrel chamber. As the slide approaches its forward position, the slide face chamber compresses the rear face of barrel and forces the barrel forward and forward. When the slide and barrel reach their forward position they are positively locked together by the locking pins in the barrel and their rear forward movement is arrested by the barrel lock compressing the slide stop pin.

The pistol is then ready for firing.

When the pistol is loaded, it is not until the barrel is moved to the half and back.

When the trigger is pulled, the barrel is forced to the front and the slide moves up to the rear.

From the slide and barrel together move back, then the forward plunging movement of the barrel receiver is from the slide moving the slide face to compress the main spring, which only the barrel, vertically and again the main spring moving the slide face to compress the main spring. The main movement of the slide under the influence of the main spring forces a cartridge into the chamber and then the slide, forcing the pistol again ready for firing.
