

The Hammer-on

Another left-hand technique is the hammer-on. On paper the hammer-on looks similar to the slide. It is indicated by a first number, with a "h" to a second higher first number, and an "H" above the staff line. While the open string is still sounding, a finger is brought down (hammered) on the string at the higher fret.

Example

Let's add both the slide and the hammer-on to "Boil Them Cabbage Down".

Boil Them Cabbage Down (with slide and hammer-on)

Practice until you can perform these left-hand techniques smoothly. Increase the tempo as you feel comfortable. You will notice that as the tempo increases, the execution of the slide and hammer-on has to be a little quicker.

Practice Tip

In order to get a good sense of your right and left-hand positions, play looking into a mirror. Turn several different ways to get different views into your right-hand position. Work towards playing on the tips of your picks. Avoid digging too deeply into the strings. Many beginning players hit the banjo head with their picks and causes a non-rhythmical and non-musical sound. Make sure you have a slight bend in your wrist. As you use your left-hand fingers to fret the strings, work to keep them close to the fingerboard just above the strings. Pay attention to both hands and work towards smooth, graceful, and efficient finger movements.
