Chapters 9, 10, 12, 13, & Discipline

Chapter 9: Cognitive & Language Development in Early Childhood

Cognitive Development

- Preoperational Stage: 3-6 years of age
- Piaget uses operational to refer to the logical systems of thought which emerge in middle childhood
- Time when preschoolers are incapable of advance forms of reasoning (understanding that while horses are animals, not all animals are horses)
- The Symbolic Function: end of second year of life
- Symbolic function: the ability to use symbols to represent or stand for perceived objects and events
- Takes several distinct forms: deferred imitation, symbolic or pretend play, mental images, and language
- Deferred imitation: children observe the behavior of a model and imitate that behavior when the model is no longer present
- Ex: after watching parents using eating utensils for several months, a toddler makes his first spontaneous attempts to use a spoon
- Symbolic/pretend play: children pretend that an object is something other than what it really is
- Ex: 18-month-old lifts an empty cup to his face, tips it as if to drink, licks his lips, and looks at his mother with a grin that indicates he knows he did not really drink
- Transforms any situation into an unlimited world of make-believe for preschoolers
- Shifting Context: performing routine behaviors outside of their typical setting
- Ex: Jacey and her friends shifting context by transforming the abandoned car into a kitchen and dining room
- Substituting Objects: children often substitute one object for another in their pretend play
- During third year children are able to transform virtually any object into props needed for their pretend play
- Become progressively less dependent on realistic objects
- Ex: Jacey and her friends have no problem substituting an assortment of junk for the utensils and food items necessary for their play
- Substituting Other Agents for Oneself: late in second year, children begin to use dolls in pretend play, but only as passive agents
- By beginning of third year, most children use dolls as active agents, pretending that dolls initiate and sustain their own behavior as in talking, running, or playing with other dolls
- Sequencing & Socialization of Pretend Episodes:
- Ex: 2-year old's hair combing may expand into the 4-year-old's sequenced grooming: washing, putting on make-up, combing hair, & dressing
- Conventional roles are also developed-police officer is supposed to catch the crooks
- Mental images: internal representations of external objects or events
- Mental images free children from here and now, enabling them to think about objects even when the objects are not physically there
- The Advent of Preconcepts
- Contractions: preschool-age children tend to focus their attention on minute and often inconsequential aspects of their experience
- Ex: child remember nothing about his babysitter other than her bright colored earrings
- These collections of images merge into preconcepts: disorganized, illogical, representations of the child's experiences
- Transductive Reasoning: Thinking With Preconcepts
- The disorganized and illogical nature of preconcepts severely limits the quality of preschool-age children's reasoning and problem solving
- Induction: we derive general principles from particular examples
- Ex: 8-year old boy observes that his teacher favorites girls, so boy induces that girls are teacher's pets
