As aforementioned, The law of islam is relatively rigid. In its nature, the islamic law is based on God's revelation that is unchangeable in any time and place. Therefore the norms of islam is a lifetime system, thus is static. However, as in the fiqh of islam, the islamic jurisprudence may also be conducted in the circle of this lifetime system through the process of ijtihad. Which then may be carried out in certain human conditions that outstand the scope of peace and morality. In this manner, the islamic law can and should be held in any states which have muslims people residing. Wherever there is muslims, there should be islamic law following and protecting them from any misaligns. This act itself is the form of democracy. Hence, the islamic law should be applicable in any places and times along the democracy system for its believers.
