

Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health of sedentary, middle-aged men. The program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The first session was a warm-up, the second was a cardiovascular workout, and the third was a strength training session. The results showed that the men who participated in the program had a significant improvement in their physical fitness and health compared to the control group. The men who participated in the program had a significant increase in their heart rate, blood pressure, and cholesterol levels. They also had a significant decrease in their body mass index (BMI) and waist circumference. The men who participated in the program also had a significant improvement in their mental health, as measured by the Beck Depression Inventory (BDI). The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can have a positive effect on the physical fitness and health of sedentary, middle-aged men.
