Abstract
 The purpose of this study was to investigate the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary middle-aged women. The study was conducted in a laboratory setting. The participants were 20 sedentary middle-aged women (mean age = 45.5 years, range 40-50 years). They were divided into two groups: a control group (n = 10) and an exercise group (n = 10). The exercise group performed a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes. The training program included aerobic exercise, strength training, and flexibility exercises. The control group did not participate in any training program. The study measured the following variables: heart rate, blood pressure, body mass index (BMI), and psychological health (measured using the Beck Depression Inventory-II). The results showed that the exercise group had significantly lower heart rate, blood pressure, and BMI compared to the control group at the end of the 12-week training program. Additionally, the exercise group had significantly lower scores on the Beck Depression Inventory-II compared to the control group. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary middle-aged women.
