RELATIONSHIP DYNAMICS

What does a codependent relationship look like?

To better understand what a codependent relationship looks like, it's important to understand what a healthy relationship dynamic looks like.

A healthy relationship dynamic involves two people who are interdependent, while also working together as a team. In a healthy relationship, both parties are able to express their feelings and needs, and both parties are able to support each other's growth and development.

Negative effects of CODEPENDENCY?

Effects of long-term codependency on the brain and health

Codependency can have significant effects on the brain and mental health. One of the impacts of codependency is the disruption of regulation and self-identity. Codependent individuals often struggle with identifying and expressing their own emotions. This can lead to a sense of emotional numbness.

Codependency can result in a loss of self-identity as individuals neglect their needs and desires of others over their own. Over time, this can lead to resentment, frustration, and a diminished sense of self-worth.

Development of anxiety and depression is another consequence of long-term codependency. The constant need to control others and fear of abandonment or being alone can contribute to heightened levels of anxiety. Codependent individuals may also experience chronic stress. Due to the pressure to meet the needs of others, codependent individuals can lead to symptoms of depression and anxiety. The impact on mental health can be significant, leading to a cycle of self-doubt and self-blame.
