Concussion Brian Hainline, Lindsey J. Gurin, Daniel M. Torres, 2020 Abstract Concussion is a type of mild traumatic brain injury is common and occurs both in sport and as a result of falls or accidents Concussion has become an increasingly recognized public health concern largely driven by prominent media coverage of athletes who have sustained concussion Although much has been written about this condition we still do not understand its natural history and we are only now beginning to recognize that concussion often manifests in different clinical domains These may require targeted treatment in and of themselves otherwise persistent

postconcussive symptoms may develop Although most individuals who sustain a concussion recover and although concussion is a treatable condition it is important that concussion be managed early and comprehensively to avoid a more prolonged clinical trajectory A relatively recent term often used in the setting of concussion is repetitive head impact exposure a biomechanical force applied to the head that does not generate a clinical manifestation of concussion but may result in structural brain changes Although it is often assumed that repetitive head impact exposure leads to long term neurological sequelae the science to document this assumption is in its infancy Repeated concussions may lead to depression or cognitive impairment later in life and there is an emerging literature that repeated concussion and repetitive head impact exposure are associated with chronic traumatic encephalopathy or other neurodegenerative diseases Currently there is no known causal connection between concussion repetitive head impact exposure and neurodegeneration although this research is also still in its infancy What is clear is that a concussion prevention and safety should be paramount in sport and in society b concussion management should begin immediately and should include clinical domains and c research on concussion and repetitive head impact exposure must continue to move forward Keywords concussion mild traumatic brain injury clinical domains repetitive head impact exposure chronic traumatic encephalopathy safety

Services for people with neurological conditions Great Britain: Parliament: House of Commons: Committee of Public Accounts, Margaret Hodge, 2012-03-16 Approximately two million people in the United Kingdom have a neurological condition including Parkinson s disease motor neurone disease or multiple sclerosis But individual care is often poorly coordinated and the quality of services received depends on where you live Some areas simply don t have enough expertise both in hospitals and the community In 2005 the Department for Health launched a new Framework to provide services for people with a neurological condition There have been some improvements such as a reduction in waiting times But unlike the strategies for Cancer and Stroke the model used to implement the Framework hasn't worked For this clinical area the Department left the implementation to local health commissioners but gave them no leadership at all and set no clear targets It set no baselines and failed to monitor progress and so could not hold them to account where things went wrong The present Government needs to understand what went wrong here for the future Health spending on neurological conditions increased by nearly 40 per cent in three years Over much the same period emergency admissions have risen by 32 per cent and readmissions to hospital within 28 days have increased from 11.2 per cent to 14 per cent The Department is moving towards a decentralised health and social care landscape In doing so it must set clear objectives for joint health and social care outcomes and services for people with neurological conditions
