What Develops in Emotional Development? Michael F. Mascolo, Sharon Griffin, 2013-11-22 The problem of development is central in the study of emotional life for two basic reasons First emotional life so clearly changes dramatically in the early years with new emotional reactions emerging against the backdrop of an increasing sensitivity to context and with self regulation of emotion emerging from a striking dependence on regulatory assistance from caregivers Such changes demand developmental analysis At the same time understanding such profound changes will surely inform our understanding of the nature of development more generally The complexity of emotional change when grasped will reveal the elusive nature of development itself At the outset we know that development is complex We must take seriously what is present at any given phase including the newborn period because a developmental analysis disallows something emerging from nothing Still it is equally nondevelopmental to posit that new forms of new processes were simply present in their precursors Rather development is characterized by transformations in which more complex structures and organization emerge from new integration of prior components and new capacities These new forms and organizations cannot be specified from prior conditions but are due to transactions of the evolving organism with its environment over time They are not simply in the genome and they are not simply conditioned by the environment They are the result of the developmental process

Emotional Development in Atypical Children Michael Lewis, Margaret Wolan Sullivan, 2014-03-05 Early emotional development emotional regulation and the links between emotion and social or cognitive functioning in atypically developing children have not received much attention This lack is due in part to the priorities given to the educational and therapeutic needs of these children Yet an understanding of the basic emotional processes in children with atypical development can only serve to promote more effective strategies for teaching and intervening in the lives of these children and their families and may contribute to our understanding of basic emotional processes as well When referring to emotions the editors mean some complex set of processes or abilities whether or not the topic is normal or atypical development Specifically they use the term emotion to refer to at least three things emotional expressions emotional states and emotional experiences The focus of this volume these three aspects of emotional life are affected by socialization practices maturational change and individual biological differences including in this case differences in children as a function of disability Contributors examine the development of emotions in children with organic or psychological disorders as well as those in compromised social contexts making this volume of prime importance to developmental clinical and social psychologists educators and child mental health experts
