

On Combat: The Psychology and Physiology of Deadly Conflict in War and Peace

Author: David Grossman and Loren W. Christensen

In his summary of "On Combat", McKinney explains how the many challenges faced by military personnel in combat situations also face peacebuilding personnel operating in insecure locations. McKinney highlights the many lessons peacebuilders might learn by reading this summary -- and this book.

Citation: Grossman, Dave and Loren W. Christensen. On Combat: The Psychology and Physiology of Deadly Conflict in War and Peace. 2nd ed. PPCT Research Publications, 2007.

David Grossman, a former United States Army Ranger and West Point psychology professor, wrote On Combat: The Psychology and Physiology of Deadly Conflict in War and in Peace with former police officer Loren Christensen. The book is based on interviews and debriefs of soldiers and police, the authors' own personal experience, and research by others in the field. While Grossman presents the book as a work for military and law enforcement, he does make mention of traditional peace workers in saying, "I hope this book will be of use to the gentle, decent and discerning spirits in the peace movement." The author includes military, police, development, relief, and medical personnel under the umbrella term "peace warriors", and believes that all peace warriors "must study and master combat as the firefighter would study and master fire." It is my hope in writing this summary that I can extract and clearly present the information that is most important for peace warriors in the conflict resolution community.

There is a great deal of information in On Combat that pertains more specifically to the training and philosophy of the armed warrior (some of which was not included in this review for brevity's sake), but I believe there is content in the book that can also prove useful to peace workers in a few ways. Modern conflict zones frequently have no front line, and so anyone working in one would do well to understand the consequences of extreme high stress on most humans. Similarly, an understanding of the lasting effects of combat on those who fight can aid in the process of reintegrating soldiers post-conflict, and can help peace workers sympathize with allied military and civilians in combat zones with whom they may be working closely. Additionally, I would argue that a general understanding of emotional trauma is vital for anyone working in any conflict related field.

Preventing Deadly Conflict Carnegie Commission on Preventing Deadly Conflict, 1998 The Psychology of Conflict and Combat Ben Shalit, 1988-03-25 Shalit draws on the research he conducted as field psychologist in the Israeli military to offer an original behavioral model of combat that accounts for the fighting potential of an individual or group His model is based on the appraisal process that the individual undertakes in combat conditions to assess a situation whether it concerns him or not and regardless of his role. It is through this process that the individual makes a judgment taking into consideration his past experience, knowledge and expectations that in turn leads to a course of action. Shalit pinpoints and describes specific aspects of the psychology of combat and conflict including the motivation to act in combat with special reference to the aggression drive, the definition of an enemy and the effects such appraisals have on behavior, the situational factors in heroic acts and discipline and its effects on combat efficiency.

The Psychology and Physiology of Stress Peter Bourne, 2012-12-02. The Psychology and Physiology of Stress investigates the psychological and physiological consequences of stress caused by the Vietnam War. It includes the contributions of the representatives of the US Armed Forces and the Army of the Republic of Vietnam. Furthermore, it summarizes advances both in the clinical and research spheres that have evolved from the conflict. This book begins with a brief historical review of psychiatric disorders associated with combat with emphasis on changes in their frequency, terminology and manifestations. It is followed by chapters dealing with the organization and development of US Army psychiatry in Vietnam, psychiatry in the Army of the Republic of Vietnam, South Vietnam Forces and psychiatric disorders of Marine and Naval personnel who have been evacuated to an offshore based hospital ship. The book also explains the patterns of psychiatric attrition and behavior in the combat zone, steroid and other biochemical responses to combat stress which involve measurements of 17 hydroxycorticosteroids, androgens and various phospholipid fractions, heat stress in army pilots in Vietnam, background characteristics, attitudes and self-concepts of air force psychiatric casualties from Southeast Asia, and stress and fatigue monitoring of naval aviators during aircraft carrier combat operations. The book concludes with a chapter on progress in combat psychiatry after the Vietnam War. This book is a valuable resource for psychiatrists, psychologists and healthcare and military personnel concerned with the effects of combat-induced stress.

On Killing Dave Grossman, 1998-12. The twentieth century with its bloody world wars, revolutions and genocides, accounting for hundreds of millions dead, would seem to prove that human beings are incredibly vicious predators and that killing is as natural as eating. But Lieutenant Colonel Dave Grossman, a psychologist and US Army Ranger, demonstrates this is not the case. The good news, according to Grossman, drawing on dozens of interviews, first person reports and historic studies of combat ranging from Frederick the Great's battles in the eighteenth century through Vietnam, is that the vast majority of soldiers are loath to kill. In World War II, for instance, only 15 to 25 percent of combat infantry were willing to fire their rifles. The provocative news is that modern armies using Pavlovian and operant conditioning have learned how to overcome this reluctance. In Korea, about 50 percent of combat infantry were willing to shoot, and in Vietnam, the figure rose to over 90 percent. The bad news is that by conditioning soldiers to overcome their instinctive loathing of killing, we have drastically increased post-combat stress, witness the devastated psychological state of our Vietnam vets as compared with those from earlier wars. And the truly terrible news is that contemporary civilian society, particularly the media, replicates the army's conditioning techniques and according to Grossman's controversial thesis is responsible for our rising rates of murder and violence particularly among the young. In the explosive last section of the book he argues that high body count movies, television violence, both news and entertainment, and interactive point and shoot video games are dangerously similar to the training programs that dehumanize the enemy, desensitize soldiers to the psychological ramifications of killing, and make pulling the trigger an automatic response.

Psychology of Human Conflict Edwin Ray Guthrie, 1962 Quicklet on Dave Grossman's On Killing: The Psychological Cost of Learning to Kill in War and Society Jonathan Morse, 2012-02-24

ABOUT THE BOOK Lt Col Dave Grossman's book On Killing: The Psychological Cost of Learning to Kill in War and Society is a soldier's account of how one person learns right or wrong to kill another. The Pulitzer Prize nominated work documents the mental preparations and emotional trauma born in the terror of human conflict. The book tells the story of veterans across hundreds of years of warfare. Grossman uses his book as a vessel for the words of those who have had to kill, painting a vivid portrait of the human cost to foe and victor alike.

MEET THE AUTHOR Jonathan has been writing independently for two years and recently graduated from Northern Illinois University with baccalaureate degrees in journalism and political science. His time is spent reading, writing, or playing whatever musical instruments he can build, find, or afford.

EXCERPT FROM THE BOOK Grossman begins On Killing with an explanation of the natural human aversion to violence and killing. During WWII a US Army Brigadier General named S. L. A. Marshall began observing and questioning soldiers in the Pacific on their actual behavior in combat. To the surprise of the US military establishment, he found that most men never fired their weapons. Approximately 15 to 20 percent of soldiers fired as expected; the rest pretended so they wouldn't have to kill anyone; others disagreed (see later section).

A Controversial Influence These men were not cowards; in fact, many were reported to take great personal risks to assist their fellow soldiers, but still they would not attack even under fire. Their training had taught them how to fire a gun, but not how to shoot at another human being. Buy a copy to keep reading.
