it never occurred to me that I might ever be in a position to act on the seemingly permanent relationship between sculpture and pedestal as established since antiquity.

CLASSICAL STYLES

What is the difference between statue and sculpture? Is it fundamental, and if so, why does it not play a role in its discussion or classification?

Looking precisely, and at this time only, the classical style clearly reinforces the statue depicted by certain names... vertical, inhuman, erect, not one raised, or more, in a vague gesture of gesturing or blessing. But for any sculpture that depicts movement, the classical pedestal is not a reinforcement, a plausible extension, but an isolationism. The sculpture is inevitably a loose frame of a moment of visible movement—the walk, sideways, or even backwards—but that movement is denied, subverted, deflected, diverted, and even contradicted by the pedestal. For many sculptures, the separation from the ground that the style performs kills the energy of the work and reduces its adherence to meaning.

For a statue to repose, the style works as a dignified confirmation; for the sculpture that "moves," the style becomes an unwanted correction: the sculpture suggests there will be further life, but the style guarantees this is the final position.

Separating sculpture from their supports and imagining them simply standing, walking, falling, dying—on the ground—each work gains in eloquence and immediacy simply because their "frame" is allowed more space, not condemned or upheld on the wall of a stone board.

The pedestal isolates
the sculpture.

Obviously, the style individualism. It implies the end of movement, initiative, or communication. It suggests complete indifference to relationships. A style implies a framed perception; it dictates the distribution of attention, perhaps the front, discourages the back, ignores the sides, denies the oblique—in that of a possible plus degree of exposure only a trigger to degree remains—and it permits the absence of digging "into" of sculpture, ranged along the wall or the leading line creates arrangement of sculpture in a corridor.

What the project is for the humanly, the style is for the animation of classical sculpture—is that is, apparently forces, so it not-undoes the operations, classifications, judgments and even that are the harmonic domain of the object... irreversibly to look artist and public.

On closer inspection, the relationship between classical sculpture and classic style is even more fraught—the marble statue almost always stands on a small, usually unadorned base—often shaped to echo the sculpture's verticalized impulse, which may consist of the feet, often leaving on a track like device that channels the focus generated by the sculpture's movement into a structurally complex connection back to the style—e.g., an aqueduct statue resting on three feet, leaving against a balustrade track.

The isolation of our interpretation is so intense on the level of the pedestal and single statue. By imagining the pedestal not as a support point, but as a plane, we want to release the energies of classical sculpture that have and not been denied and absorbed by its unavoidable fixation on the pedestal. By creating a landscape
