User's Guide

Installation of the Wiring Harness

(for MRX-12 through MRX-48)

1. Verify that the host system wiring is in good condition and that there are no shorted solenoids, relays, or field wiring circuits.

2. Connect a P-30 wiring harness(es) (pigtail) to the device to be controlled following the instructions included with the wiring harness(es) (see Stations chart below). The P-30 wiring harness is considered the same as a universal wiring harness.

   When connecting more than one wiring harness, there is no need to connect the tan, pink, or red with the yellow stripe wires (from ports 13-24, 25-36, or 37-48). (See Illustration 1.)

   ⚠ Any unused wires should be insulated to prevent shorting. Use small wire nuts or a good quality electrical tape even if the wires are cut off.

3. Verify that there are no connections made to any circuit that uses any voltage other than 24VAC. Pump starters sometimes use 115VAC and even 230VAC, which would cause serious non-warranty damage to the remote controller.

4. If the remote controller is used with more than one host controller at the same time, there must be a system common wire connected to all controllers. If there is more than one transformer used in these systems, verify that all the transformers are in phase with each other before connecting the remote controller. If there is an out of phase transformer, there will be transformer damage, controller damage, a blown fuse, a tripped circuit breaker, or all of the above.
Illustration 1:

Note the unused and capped wires.
