UPDATED CPESC MANUAL (V.7.0) RELEASE

EnviroCert International Inc., (ECI) is excited to announce the release of the Certified Professional in Erosion and Sediment Control (CPESC) General Principles Review Manual, Version 7.0, dated July 2023. This update is the culmination of several years of work by various councils and committees, and reflects comments from Certified Professionals across the U.S., Malaysia, Mexico, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, Central and South America, France, Germany, England, Italy, South Africa, Japan, Philippines, and China.

The manual represents overriding principles and foundation for the practice in erosion and sediment control. These principles and foundations can be applied to address local climate, soil, hydrology, geology, etc. conditions to meet permit requirements by providing the tools to manage specific site requirements and aid in the selection of control practices. ECI recognizes that erosion and sediment control, like all sciences, is dynamic, and this manual will continue to evolve with the change in practice.

ECI Staff and Board of Directors would like to extend a special thank you to everyone involved in this update including especially the steering committee members, and countless volunteers who provided comments and editorial comments. The following link is provided as a courtesy to the entire stormwater and environmental community for their use as a reference.

Environmental Site Plans and Development Review Robert Sanford, 2017-08-15 The most effective way to participate in land stewardship and environmental management is to get involved in the review of proposed developments In smaller communities this review is primarily done by a planning board or commission made up of volunteer members guided by professionals in certain aspects such as traffic historic preservation civil engineering water supply and wastewater disposal In larger communities professional planning staff with the assistance of municipal engineers conducts the review which will then be presented to the planning commission In either case everyone officials volunteers reviewers consultants neighbors and the public in general needs to know what is being proposed The site plan itself is the primary tool for understanding the proposal Environmental review is not an easy task even for consultants and professional planners There is a need for a general guide that presents the design infrastructure and environmental issues to address what a reviewer needs to know about these issues and how to interpret them The book points the reader to accessible low cost resources to aid in the review process In these times of climate change rising populations energy challenges and economic turmoil there is a real need for development to occur in as efficient and environmentally responsible a manner as possible Citizen review is a critical step in the approval alteration or denial of site plans for land subdivision and new development Hence informed participants in the review processes are more important than ever This book is designed to assist professional archaeologists environmental consultants and others interested in construction development and other physical land alteration that must go before some sort of review board The book is also suitable for college undergraduates and graduate students in fields that bring them into environmental development of sites And it is useful for neighbors and other members of the public who want to understand proposed land development in their neighborhood

Managing Soils in an Urban Environment Randall Barber Brown, James

Herbert Huddleston, James Leonard Anderson, 2000 Soil science with its roots in both the plant sciences and geology first came into being as a recognizable discipline in response to questions concerning plant growth. The chemical and physical characteristics of the soil as well as landscape processes that controlled those characteristics were of great interest to agronomists, horticulturists, geographers, geomorphologists, and geologists, some of whom drifted into one another's orbit and over the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries brought their experiences and talents together to form the nucleus of soil science. In those early years a perception developed that soil science was simply an agricultural and edaphological science, which indeed it was in large measure. However pervasive and stubborn that perception was, there has been from the beginning a segment of the community of soil scientists that has maintained an interest in soil science writ large. These soil scientists, while continuing to interact with agronomists, horticulturists, and foresters, have maintained communications, collaborations, and linkages with such disciplines as geology, geomorphology, geography, land use planning, and engineering. In the second half of the twentieth century, soil science has expanded its contacts with these nonagricultural disciplines and now finds itself addressing a much wider range of problems, questions, and issues than it did in the first half of the century. In response to a growing demand for information, nonagricultural land uses increasingly have been the focus of soil studies, and of the development of soil interpretations and other decision tools for land users.
