

CP 3 : Chapter V : Part 2 : 1972 Wind loads

4.2 It is important to note that the wind load on a partially completed structure will be dependent on the method and sequence of construction and may be critical. It is reasonable to assume that the maximum design wind speed V_d will not occur during a short construction period, and a reduced factor S_3 can be used to calculate the probable maximum wind. The graphs of Fig. 2 should not, however, be extrapolated to a period of less than two years.

4.3 The assessment of wind load should be made as follows:

(1) The basic wind speed V appropriate to the district where the structure is to be erected is determined in accordance with 5.2.

(2) The basic wind speed is multiplied by factors S_1 , S_2 and S_3 to give the design wind speed V_d for the part under consideration (see 5.3, 5.4, 5.5 and 5.6)

$$V_d = V S_1 S_2 S_3$$

(3) The design wind speed is converted to dynamic pressure q using the relationship

$$q = k V_d^2$$

Tables 4, 5 and 6 give corresponding values of q and V_d in the three systems of units. See also Fig. 2.

(4) a. The dynamic pressure q is then multiplied by an appropriate pressure coefficient C_p to give the pressure p exerted at any point on the surface of a building:

$$p = C_p q$$

If the value of the pressure coefficient C_p is negative this indicates that p is a suction as distinct from a positive pressure.

Since the resultant load on an element depends on the difference of pressure between opposing faces, pressure coefficients may be given for external surfaces C_{pe} and internal surfaces C_{pi} . The resultant wind load on an element of surface acts in a direction normal to that surface and then:

$$F = (C_{pe} - C_{pi}) q A$$

where A is the area of the surface.

A negative value for F indicates that the resultant force is outwards. The total wind load on a structure may be obtained by vectorial summation of the loads on all the surfaces.

(4) b. There is, however, another and shorter method of finding the total wind load on the building as a whole by using a force coefficient C_f where such is available.

The total wind load F is then given by:

$$F = C_f q A_s$$

where A_s is the effective frontal area of the structure.

The direction in which the force acts is specified in the tables for the force coefficients.

Pressure coefficients and force coefficients are given in 7 for a range of building shapes. Force coefficients are given in 8 for unclad structures.

5. Design wind speed

5.1 General. The design wind speed V_d should be calculated from where V is the basic wind speed (see 5.2), and S_1 , S_2 , S_3 are design wind speed factors (see 5.3 to 5.6 inclusive).

$$V_d = V S_1 S_2 S_3$$

5.2 Basic wind speed

5.2.1 The basic wind speed V is the 3-second gust speed estimated to be exceeded on the average once in 50 years. This speed has been assessed for the United Kingdom by statistical analysis of the continuous wind records from the meteorological stations after adjusting them, as necessary, to a common basis. The values are given as isopleths (lines of equal wind speed) drawn at 2 m/s intervals on the map in Fig. 1. Values from this map represent the 3-second gust speed, at 10 m (33 ft) above ground in an open situation, that is likely to be exceeded on the average only once in 50 years.
