Iskandrian, 2022-08-18 Performing any diagnostic test in medicine is always a matter of trying to get the condition of the patient diagnosed properly with the least effort exposure discomfort and at the same time with the lowest possible error

probability Pre test probability is helpful but often imprecise effectively overestimating the patient's risk profile In a broader prevention objective the phases of a disease its onset progression and complications must be taken into account The negative predictive value which is so important has in turn its main limitation in identifying the healthy patient that is the one who does not belong to any cluster of patients in which we would act in terms of prevention In coronary syndromes the goal is instead to evaluate coronary heart disease from mild to more extensive and significant forms For this purpose it is necessary to use parameters that investigate different and complementary aspects stenosis ischemia the morphology of the atherosclerotic plaque metabolic processes in particular vitality and apoptosis the presence of inflammatory processes The possibility already present thanks to Hybrid Imaging of joining exams that study different aspects will allow the patient to be increasingly characterized not only from a diagnostic point of view but also from a prognostic and personalized therapeutic choice

Interim Report of the Committee on a Strategic Plan for U.S. Burning Plasma Research National Academies of Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine, Division on Engineering and Physical Sciences, Board on Physics and Astronomy, Committee on a Strategic Plan for U.S. Burning Plasma Research, 2018-03-19. In January 2003, President George W. Bush announced that the United States would begin negotiations to join the ITER project and noted that if successful, ITER would create the first fusion device capable of producing thermal energy comparable to the output of a power plant, making commercially viable fusion power available as soon as 2050. The United States and the other ITER members are now constructing ITER with the aim to demonstrate that magnetically confined plasmas can produce more fusion power than the power needed to sustain the plasma. This is a critical step towards producing and delivering electricity from fusion energy. Since the international establishment of the ITER project, ITER's construction schedule has slipped and ITER's costs have increased significantly, leading to questions about whether the United States should continue its commitment to participate in ITER. This study will advise how to best advance the fusion energy sciences in the United States given developments in the field, the specific international investments in fusion science and technology, and the priorities for the next ten years developed by the community and the Office of Fusion Energy Sciences (FES) that were recently reported to Congress. It will address the scientific justification and needs for strengthening the foundations for realizing fusion energy given a potential choice of U.S. participation or not in the ITER project and develops future scenarios in either case. This interim report assesses the current status of U.S. fusion research and of the importance of burning plasma research to the development of fusion energy, as well as to plasma science and other science and engineering disciplines. The final report will present strategies that incorporate continued progress toward a burning plasma experiment and a focus on innovation.
