

novel. He is a young man who is struggling to survive in a world full of blundering chaos, wild predicaments, and, last, but not least, proper society.

More often than not, Pip finds that attempting to survive in his society is not easy; however, it is possible to choose. There are characters within the novel that help him with his perseverance and endurance of his story such as his brother-in-law, Joe Gargery, and his sister, Mrs. Joe Gargery.

Pip's narration encourages the reader to capture the story from his point of view. It engages them to investigate further into the plight of his dilemma. Pip, better than any other, is better able to illustrate to the reader the full extent of his situation. As a result, the novel reaps the benefits by having a realistic and youthful slant to its point of view.

As the novel begins, Pip is living and being raised by his brother-in-law, the blacksmith, Mr. Joe Gargery, and his sister, Mrs. Joe Gargery. His brother-in-law could be described as a gentle, meek, docile man who hardly speaks unless spoken to. He hardly seems to mind the antics of Pip; he simply minds his own business and creates his own peace.

Unlike his brother-in-law, his sister would be described as the opposite of gentle and meek. She does not even display the characteristic of being nice. However, she could be described as cruel, harsh, and heavy on the punishment, especially when the situations involve Pip. She even, mentally and, at times, physically punishes her own husband.

Further, Pip's dilemma is mostly caused and exploited by his sister. The reader quickly realizes that she does not allow him to mature and flourish as a growing young
