

Assignment 2 – Plate Tectonics and the Origin of Volcanic Igneous Rocks

Objectives

1. Understand how stress, friction and plate boundaries determine if Earth's surface features, including volcanoes, will form.

2. Understand and explain how plate boundaries are the physical 'engines' capable of creating volcanic features, volcanic arcs, volcanoes, magma and igneous rocks.

Introduction

Plate tectonics is the science of the movement of large pieces of the Earth's crust, known as plates, along plate boundaries. These plates move relative to each other, either towards each other (convergent plate boundaries), away from each other (divergent plate boundaries), or past each other horizontally (transform plate boundaries). This theory was first developed in 1912 by Alfred Wegener, and is now the dominant theory of the Earth's crust.

The theory of plate tectonics describes the movement of the Earth's crust and upper mantle, which is divided into plates. These plates move relative to each other, either towards each other (convergent plate boundaries), away from each other (divergent plate boundaries), or past each other horizontally (transform plate boundaries). This theory was first developed in 1912 by Alfred Wegener, and is now the dominant theory of the Earth's crust.

Plates are large sections of the Earth's crust and upper mantle that move relative to each other. They are bounded by plate boundaries, which are the locations where plates meet. There are three types of plate boundaries: divergent, convergent, and transform. Divergent boundaries are where plates move apart, convergent boundaries are where plates move together, and transform boundaries are where plates slide past each other.

Plate boundaries

The three main types of plate boundaries are divergent, convergent, and transform. Divergent boundaries are where plates move apart, convergent boundaries are where plates move together, and transform boundaries are where plates slide past each other. Divergent boundaries are characterized by the formation of new oceanic crust, while convergent boundaries are characterized by the destruction of oceanic crust. Transform boundaries are characterized by the sliding of plates past each other.

Below is a diagram of the three types of plate boundaries and the features they create.
