

"CRD" burners feature a combustion head incorporating a new design concept which provides a means to control the air pattern to match the nozzle requirements. The aerodynamics for optimum combustion are easily adjusted for any nozzle size without changing the air-handling hardware. The flame front is initiated inside the air tube so that no erratic re-circulating gasses from the main chamber area can quench the flame at the retention ring.

The letters "CRD" stand for "Controlled Retention-Double Speed."

Use of a small blower wheel (fan) operating at 3450 rpm provides a more positive, yet quiet, air flow which does not yield to normal draft variations and therefore assures a more constant air-fuel ratio for dependably clean combustion day after day.
