The Surveillance Web Mike McCahill, 2013-01-11 The rise of CCTV and surveillance technologies has been one of the key developments in contemporary society but its impact has often been analysed in a fragmented manner This book addresses this issue by providing a detailed micro sociological account of the construction of a CCTV network in one English city It differs from previous studies which have concentrated on open street CCTV systems in documenting and analysing the use of visual surveillance systems in a number of different locations and institutional settings including the industrial workplace shopping malls high rise housing schemes and hospitals It is concerned not just with abstract categories of grand theory but seeks to explain how people living in contemporary society experience these changes The Surveillance Web situates the growth of visual surveillance systems in the context of many of the key concerns of theorists of modernity and makes a key contribution to understanding the nature of the relationship between surveillance and society Its starting point is to view the relationship between surveillance and society as a two way process the book looks at both the social impact of visual surveillance systems and at how the impact of these technologies is shaped by existing social relations political practice and cultural traditions provides a richly textured account and analysis of the introduction of visual surveillance technologies CCTV in an English city explores the impact of the introduction and use of visual surveillance systems in a wide variety of locales and institutional settings both public and private makes a key contribution to theoretical debates over the relationship between surveillance systems and society one of the central concerns of theorists of modernity

Neuroscience perspectives on Security: Technology, Detection, and Decision Making Elena Rusconi, Kenneth C. Scott-Brown, Andrea Szymkowiak, 2015-08-03 In security science efficient operation depends typically on the interaction between technology human and machine detection and human and machine decision making A perfect example of this interplay is gatekeeping which is aimed to prevent the passage of people and objects that represent known threats from one end to the other end of an access point Gatekeeping is most often achieved via visual inspections mass screening random sample probing and or more targeted controls on attempted passages at points of entry Points of entry may be physical e g national borders or virtual e g connection log ons Who and what are defined as security threats and the resources available to gatekeepers determine the type of checks and technologies that are put in place to ensure appropriate access control More often than not the net performance of technology aided screening and authentication systems ultimately depends on the characteristics of human operators Assessing cognitive affective behavioural perceptual and brain processes that may affect gatekeepers while undertaking this task is fundamental. On the other hand, assessing the same processes in those individuals who try to breach access to secure systems e.g. hackers and try to cheat controls e.g. smugglers is equally fundamental and challenging. From a security standpoint, it is vital to be able to anticipate, focus on, and correctly interpret the signals connected with such attempts to breach access and/or elude controls in order to be proactive and to enact appropriate responses. Knowing cognitive, behavioral, social, and neural constraints that may affect the security enterprise will undoubtedly result in a more effective deployment of existing human and technological resources. Studying how inter-observer variability, human factors, and biology may affect the security agenda and the usability of existing security technologies is of great economic and policy interest. In addition, brain sciences may suggest the possibility of novel methods of surveillance and intelligence gathering. This is just one example of a typical security issue that may be fruitfully tackled from a neuroscientific and interdisciplinary perspective. The objective of our Research Topic was to document across relevant disciplines some of the most recent developments, ideas, methods, and empirical findings that have the potential to expand our knowledge of the human factors involved in the security process. To this end, we welcomed empirical contributions using different methodologies such as those applied in human cognitive neuroscience, biometrics, and ethology. We also accepted original theoretical contributions in the form of review articles, perspectives, or opinion papers on this topic. The submissions brought together researchers from different backgrounds to discuss topics which have scientific, applicative, and social relevance.

CCTV and Policing Benjamin Jervis Gould, 2004. CCTV and Policing is the first major published work to present a comprehensive assessment of the impact of CCTV on the police in Britain. Drawing extensively upon empirical research, the volume examines how the police in Britain first became involved in public area surveillance and how they have since attempted to use CCTV technology to prevent, respond to, and investigate crime. In addition, the volume also provides a detailed analysis of the legality of CCTV surveillance in light of recent changes to the Data Protection Act and the incorporation of the European Convention on Human Rights. Challenging many existing accounts of the relationship between the police and new surveillance technologies, CCTV and Policing breaks new ground in policing and surveillance theory and argues that it is time for a major reassessment of both our understanding of how the police respond to technological change and of the role played by such technologies in our society.
