

Creating A Learning Culture: 9 Tips

80%

of employees say that having learning & development opportunities would help them feel more engaged

84%

of employees in the best performing companies are getting the training they need. Opposed to 16% in the worst performing companies.

#1

Make learning a priority from day one

Provide new hires with pre-boarding courses right after signing the contract. Here you can introduce them to your company values, add introductions of some departments, and give tips for the first day at work. This helps people get used to learning from the very beginning.

#2

Lead by Example

Have managers and company leadership participate in the learning process by acting as coaches or mentors. Or organize "Train the Manager" sessions for Managers. These sessions will help them understand how to ensure behavior change through on-the-job coaching.

#3

Block time for learning

Encourage people to block time in their calendars for upskilling and learning during office hours. Don't forget to lead by example and block some time in your own calendar too!

#4

Set a goal

Example: at AIHR, we've set a goal for our team of 50 people to dedicate a total of 2500 hours to development and learning in 2021. This translates to about one hour per working week for each of us.

#5

Experiment with learning methods

The world of learning methods is your oyster, so don't be afraid to experiment and see what works best for your people! Consider creating learning journeys with a mix of different content types.

Reward learning

Start company-wide initiatives that reward people for their dedication. The prizes can either be small and less formal (think a shout out in an email or via Slack) or big and more formal (an official award at the end of every month, for example).

#7

Maximize organizational knowledge

Leverage organizational knowledge by using internal experts in learning initiatives. You can have some seasoned Sales Managers run a webinar on their best practices or set up finance for non-finance professionals e-learning as a part of your onboarding process. By doing this, you also start distributing ownership over learning with the rest of the organization.

#8

Create champions

Instead of management telling why learning is important, turn the learning junkies into champions by providing them a podium to inspire others by showcasing their achievements and how they are using new knowledge and skills to become better at their job.

#9

Incorporate learning into coaching

Enable managers to set development goals with their people and provide a learning library that they can use as a resource to help their employees upskill. Encourage them to making learning a talking point during performance reviews and regular one-on-ones to discuss the impact from previous learning activities and determine the next steps.

Developing a Culture of Learning Sorin Dumitrascu, 2017-01-24 Organizations have always had the capacity to evolve However today they need to evolve even more quickly and intelligently to sustain their competitive advantage Market conditions and customer demands are constantly changing and if organizations can anticipate and make the most of new opportunities they ll be more likely to survive and prosper in the future In a dynamic business environment organizational leaders must make learning a cornerstone of their organization s culture So how can you tell if your organization is adequately prepared to meet such rapidly changing demands In this course you ll learn how to assess the strength of your organization s learning culture First you ll find out what organizational learning really is and how it encompasses much more than traditional training You ll discover how training knowledge management and technology are all critical tools that support an organization s ability to learn Organizations also need the key elements of a learning culture holistic thinking integrated learning opportunities a capacity for change and improvement a focus on collaboration and personal commitment from employees It s in evaluating these key elements that you ll learn how to assess the strength of your own organization s learning culture If learning is so beneficial why do some people have difficulty The answer lies partly in workplace distractions The demands on people s time and the speed of events make it difficult for them to recognize and assimilate new information Organizations that want to adapt to changing business environments need to foster a learning culture Even the best training environment won t enable learning if people don t take the time to process information and learn A learning culture reflects the organizational beliefs and practices that encourage continuous development People who work in such a culture embrace continuous self development and seek to learn and grow There are obstacles to learning that you as a manager and leader need to overcome Some organizational structures and cultures present obstacles such as hierarchical thinking and isolation Hierarchical thinking where leaders are the thinkers and employees are the doers stifles learning by making nonmanagers feel their ideas aren't valued Isolation limits interaction between people who have different perspectives thus limiting their opportunity to learn This course will provide tools for overcoming these obstacles and for creating five key conditions that allow a learning culture to flourish Consider the first four conditions the freedom to explore others thoughts opinions and actions a habit of reflection inquiry and objectivity egalitarian relationships that promote power sharing and responsibility at all levels and collaborative practices that encourage people to share information and learning experiences The fifth and most important condition supporting a learning culture is motivation for learning and growth Motivation is important because organizational learning is mostly self directed This means that people take responsibility for their own learning Motivated employees are more creative and they're more committed to learning and being productive Establishing these conditions will help to promote a learning culture in your organization
