Persecution and Genocide. About the Delimitation of Genocide and Persecution Sonja Kahl,2019-10-15 Essay from the year 2015 in the subject Law European and International Law Intellectual Properties grade language English abstract Despite sharing historical roots genocide and persecution are increasingly considered two separate crimes with divergent legal elements that represent two different social wrongdoings Genocide is a crime aimed at the destruction of groups characterized by intent to destroy the group whereas persecution is an offense aimed at serious discrimination against individuals characterized by the mass or systematic character of the killing Therefore this paper will tackle the question of moral difference between genocide and persecution and ask why genocide can still be considered the crime of crimes if contrary to persecution it does not even require a mass scale attack or a high number of victims The most convincing approach argues that genocide risks more ancillary harm due to the additional intent not only to harm current group members but also to destroy the group itself Genocide per se is not worse than persecution but it is more likely to expand into massive devastation This is the reason why even small genocides need to be prosecuted punished and prevented by international law

Prosecuting War Crimes and Genocide Howard Ball,1999 Combining history politics and critical analysis he revisits the killing fields of Cambodia documents the three month Hutu machete genocide of about 800 000 Tutsi villagers in Rwanda and casts recent headlines from Kosovo in the light of these other conflicts
