an environmental disaster. With all of this on their résumé, they seem like good candidates for being the superheroes of insects. What do you think life right now would be like without them? Did prehistoric organisms benefit from the dung beetles' superpowers too? The fossil record shows that dung beetles lived at least 50 million years ago. However, since dung beetles are invertebrates lacking a skeleton capable of fossilization, the proof we have of their existence comes from the huge fossilized dung ball fossils that prehistoric dung beetles left behind. These mega dung balls came from dung beetles that were cleaning up the poop of the megafauna (giant mammals) long before they were cleaning up our poop.
