

Week 1 Notes: Early Microbiology, Microscopy, Staining, & Classification

The Early Years of Microbiology

The early years of microbiology brought the first observations of microbial life and the initial efforts to organize them into logical classifications.

What Does Life Really Look Like?

Antoni van Leeuwenhoek, a Dutch tailor, made the first simple microscope to examine the quality of cloth. The device was little more than a magnifying glass with screens for manipulating the specimen, but it allowed him to begin the first rigorous examination and documentation of the microbial world. He reported the existence of protozoa in 1674 and later the observation of bacteria. By the end of the 17th century, Leeuwenhoek's "beasties" or "animalcules" were called microorganisms. Today, they are also known as microbes.

How Can Microbes Be Classified?

Robert Hooke designed a light microscope saw tiny boxlike cavities, which he illustrated and described as cells. Hooke's discovery led to the understanding of cells as the smallest units of life—the foundation of cell theory. The cell theory formulates cells are the basic unit of structure in all organisms and the basic unit of reproduction. The three tenets to the cell theory are as follows:

1. All living organisms are composed of one or more cells.
2. The cell is the basic unit of structure and organization in organisms.
3. Cells arise from pre-existing cells.

All living organisms can be classified as either eukaryotic or prokaryotic. Eukaryotes are organisms whose cells contain a nucleus composed of genetic material surrounded by a distinct membrane. The Endosymbiotic Theory explains the origins of eukaryotic cells. The theory states that the mitochondria and chloroplast in eukaryotic cells were once aerobic bacteria (prokaryote) that were ingested by a large anaerobic bacterium (prokaryote). Prokaryotes are unicellular microbes that lack a true nucleus. Within these categories, microorganisms are further classified as follows:

- Bacteria are single-celled prokaryotes whose cell walls are composed of peptidoglycan (though some bacteria lack cell walls). Most are beneficial, but some cause disease.
- Archaea are prokaryotes whose cell walls lack peptidoglycan and instead are composed of other polymers. Archaea were first recognized in extreme environments.
- Fungi are relatively large, microscopic eukaryotes and include multicellular molds and single-celled yeasts. These organisms obtain their food from other organisms and have cell walls with chitin. All fungi reproduce asexually, and most also reproduce sexually.
- Protista are single-celled eukaryotes that are like animals in their nutritional needs and cellular structure. Most are capable of locomotion, and some cause disease.
- Algae are plantlike eukaryotes that are photosynthetic; that is, they make their own food from carbon dioxide and water using energy from sunlight. The algae include multicellular and unicellular organisms and are structurally simpler than plants.
